

The Power of the Presence

David Godman

Part Two

The Power of The Presence

Society of Abidance in Truth (SAT Temple)

1834 Ocean St., Santa Cruz, CA 95060 USA

Ph: (831) 425-7287 / www.SATRamana.org

Teachings of Sri Ramana Maharshi

and Advaita Vedanta

Satsangs~Retreats~Books~Recordings

The Power of the Presence

Transforming encounters with Sri Ramana Maharshi

Part Two

David Godman

Other titles by David Godman can be found at:
www.davidgodman.org

© David Godman

1st edition 2001
2nd edition 2019

ISBN: 0-9711371-0-2

Cover by Melissa Damelio

All rights reserved.

Anyone wishing to reproduce parts of this book should consult both the author and the 'Sources' section to ascertain who owns the copyright on individual chapters.

Published by David Godman, Avadhuta Foundation, Colorado, USA

Printed at Sudarsan Graphics Pvt. Ltd.,
4/641, 12th Link Street, Nehru Nagar
Kottivakkam (OMR), Chennai 600041
India

Contents

Kunju Swami .....	1
Muruganar .....	121
T. P. Ramachandra Iyer .....	189
Chhaganlal V. Yogi .....	221
Lakshmana Swamy .....	264
Swami Ramanagiri .....	287
Viswanatha Swami .....	312
 Sri Ramana Maharshi's life – an outline summary .....	 341
Sources .....	342
Glossary .....	346
Index .....	353

Acknowledgements

I should like to thank the President of Sri Ramanasramam, Sri V. S. Ramanan, for permission to translate and publish material that Sri Ramanasramam holds the copyright on. An item-by-item list can be found in the 'Sources' section. Sri A. R. Natarajan, President of the Ramana Maharshi Centre of Learning, Bangalore, gave permission for me to use material that appears in chapters two and three. Lakshmana Swamy and Mathru Sri Sarada permitted me to use and rewrite material that originally appeared in No Mind – I am the Self.

I should also like to thank the following translators for their contributions: Dr Venkatasubramanian (Tamil), Hemamalini (Telugu), and Vasant Kothari (Gujarati and Marathi).

I should also like to thank Melissa Demelio for designing the cover and the following people for helping with proof-reading: T. V. Venkatasubramanian, Sonia Albahari, Jennifer Hix and Art Baker.

Preface to the First Edition

I outlined the genesis and structure of The Power of the Presence in some detail when I wrote the Preface to Part One, so I will not repeat information that has already been given there. When I began to assemble the material that was eventually included in that work, my primary intention was to make available to English-speaking readers stories by devotees of Sri Ramana Maharshi that had only previously been available in various Indian languages. However, there is a vast amount of material on Sri Ramana that has appeared in English over the past few decades that is equally unknown to many foreign devotees simply because it has appeared in obscure journals or books that are rarely distributed outside India. In making my selection for this second volume I have tapped into these sources and supplemented them with new translations of classic stories about Sri Ramana.

I have followed the format of the previous volume. Those devotees whose relationship with Bhagavan dates from the early decades of his stay at Arunachala have their stories near the beginning of the book, and vice versa. The one exception, Viswanatha Swami, has a moving account of Bhagavan's passing away in 1950, so I decided his story would make a fitting final chapter.

David Godman, Tiruvannamalai, April 2001

Preface to the Second Edition

In this new edition I have thoroughly revised the chapter on Muruganar since several new editions of his writings have appeared in English over the last seventeen years. I have added a new chapter on Swami Ramanagiri to the book since I felt that his remarkable story should be brought to a wider audience. I also took a decision to add photos to the text. I should like to thank the president of Sri Ramanasramam for granting permission to include most of the photos that appear in this book. Thanks also to John Maynard of the Sri Ramanasramam Archives for helping me to locate some of the photos, some of which have never appeared in print before.

David Godman, Tiruvannamalai, May 2019

Kunju Swami

Kunju Swami's association with Bhagavan goes back to the days when the latter still lived on the hill, at Skandasram. He served as one of Bhagavan's attendants from 1920 till around 1932 when, with Bhagavan's permission, he resigned from his position so that he could spend more time meditating. From then on he lived in Palakottu, a small colony of sadhus located immediately to the west of the ashram. During the years that followed he regularly came to Bhagavan's hall to have his darshan and to listen to him expounding his teachings. He also took on the role of a roving ambassador, for he was frequently selected to represent the ashram at various functions and ceremonies that were held at other ashrams and maths.

In 1977 he wrote an account in Tamil of his life with Bhagavan. In the first chapter he described his childhood in Kerala, his early interest in the spiritual life, and his association with Elapulli Kuppanthi Swami, a local guru who taught him Vedanta and told him about the existence of a great sage, Sri Ramana Maharshi, whom he had visited at Tiruvannamalai. Kunju Swami was anxious to have Bhagavan's darshan himself, so when Kuppanthi Swami released him from his service, after first encouraging him to keep up his scriptural studies and his meditation, he returned home in January 1920 with the intention of finding a way to reach Tiruvannamalai.

When I returned home my parents were delighted to see me. I stayed with them for a couple of days but my mind was not there. It was already at Tiruvannamalai.

The Power of the Presence

While I was absorbed in thinking how I could get some money to go there, my father called me and asked, 'Do you owe money for the food and accommodation you received during your stay with Kuppandi Swami?'

When I told him that I did, he gave me five rupees and asked me to give it the next day. This gave me the means to go to Tiruvannamalai. I did not really owe any money, but I consoled myself by thinking that there was no harm in telling a small lie in order to achieve such a great ideal.

The next day, at 3 a.m., I left home without telling anyone and with a great eagerness to have Sri Bhagavan's darshan. Assuming that I would never be returning to that house again, I prostrated both to the house and to my sleeping parents before I left the village. I was afraid that people whom I knew might recognise me at the nearby Palghat railway station, so I went further down the line to Kanjikkode. I arrived there early in the morning, but when I enquired about trains to Tiruvannamalai, I was told that the first one was not due till that evening. I spent an anxious day, hoping that no one would spot me there.

As I sat in the station my mind was dwelling so intensely on my desire to see Sri Bhagavan, hunger and thirst were forgotten. A little before 6 p.m., the time the train was due to arrive, I asked for a ticket to Tiruvannamalai but was told that tickets were not being issued to that town. No reason was given. So, instead, they issued a ticket to Katpadi, a big railway junction about fifty miles north of Tiruvannamalai. I dimly remember getting into the compartment but since Sri Bhagavan's darshan was the sole thought occupying my mind, I was not aware of the passing of the night or of anything else.

The train reached Katpadi at 4 a.m. the next morning. I made some enquiries and found that the next train to Tiruvannamalai was due to leave in two and a half hours, at 6.30. However, when I went to the counter at 6 o'clock and asked for a ticket to Tiruvannamalai, I was told that the train had come early and had left at 5.30. This news disoriented me for some time. At first I did not know what to do with myself because the next train was not due to leave for Tiruvannamalai before six that evening.

When I had recovered from my disappointment, I became aware that I had not eaten anything since the morning of the previous day. I bought some elandai fruit for half an anna and passed the time by alternately eating a little of the fruit and drinking tap water from the station tap. At 5.30 I went back to the ticket office and tried to buy a ticket for Tiruvannamalai. For the second time on this journey I was told that tickets were not being issued for Tiruvannamalai. I was quite bewildered because, yet again, no reason was given. While I was standing there, wondering what to do, an elderly gentleman called out to me.

We chatted briefly and when he learned what my intended destination was he told me, 'There has been an outbreak of bubonic plague in Tiruvannamalai.<sup>1</sup> The situation there has improved a little recently, but you still cannot buy a ticket to there. It has been quarantined. However, if you buy a ticket to Tirukoilur [a station further down the line] and board the train, when the train stops at Tiruvannamalai to deliver the mail, you can get down in the dark without anyone seeing you.'

I felt very relieved when I found out that it would still be possible to continue with my journey. I asked for a ticket to Tirukoilur and handed over all my money. The ticket clerk counted it and told me that a ticket would cost a quarter of an anna more than the amount I had. Extremely disappointed by this new blow, I wandered out of the booking office and stood on the edge of the platform. There

---

<sup>1</sup> There were many outbreaks of bubonic plague all across Asia between 1890 and the late 1920s. Since this was the pre-antibiotic era, there was a high mortality rate among the victims. In an attempt to reduce the incidence of the disease, the British government evacuated areas where the disease was rampant in the hope that it would naturally die out in those places. During the 1920 outbreak in Tiruvannamalai Bhagavan remained in Skandashram, but during an earlier outbreak in 1908 he was compelled to move outside the town limits. On that occasion he took up residence in Pachaiaamman Koil, a temple on the north-east side of the hill.

The Power of the Presence

I thought of Sri Bhagavan and felt very sad that my attempt to see him had apparently been frustrated.

A few minutes before the arrival of the train I noticed, some distance from where I was standing, a glittering quarter rupee coin between the two rails. I ran, jumped down, took it and managed to purchase a ticket just as the train was entering the station. Marvelling at the compassion shown to me by Sri Bhagavan, I got into the compartment and sat down.

At about 9 p.m. that evening the train entered Tiruvannamalai station. There were no lights visible, but from the conversations of the passengers I realised that I had arrived at my destination. I watched to see if anyone else was getting down. When I saw that a person who had been sitting opposite me was disembarking in the dark, I too got down and followed him. It was Sri Bhagavan's will that I had missed the morning train in Katpadi. Had I come by that train, it would have been impossible for me to get off at Tiruvannamalai during the day because someone would have seen me.

I followed my fellow passenger without knowing where he was going. He walked for some time, stopped at a mantapam, dusted the floor with his shawl and then lay down and went to sleep. The tedious journey of two days without any proper food had also made me very tired. I joined the other man on the floor and immediately went to sleep, tired but very happy.

At 5 a.m. the next morning I woke up. I could not find the person who had guided me to the mantapam but I could see the mountain of Arunachala standing before me. Before I had left home Ramakrishna Swami [a friend of his from his home village in Kerala] had given me directions on how to find Sri Bhagavan. He had told me that if I climbed the steps that began near the back of the big temple, I would reach Sri Bhagavan's ashram.

When I reached the foot of the hill I discovered that there were three different sets of steps leading up the hill. I could not decide which one to take, but eventually I chose, at random, the one on my right and started walking along it. I climbed a short distance up the hill and encountered an ochre-robed person standing outside a building. His matted locks were so long, they were rolling on the ground. I found out later that this was a sadhu called Jada Swami. I had already seen Sri Bhagavan's photo, so I knew that this person could not be Sri Bhagavan. At that time I believed that sadhus with matted locks would pronounce deadly curses when they got angry. As this belief surfaced in my mind, I suddenly became afraid of this sadhu, so afraid I turned around and ran quickly down the hill without looking back. At the bottom of the hill I decided to try again by climbing the middle route. This time I was more successful. A few minutes after I began I saw, some distance away, two people standing on the bank of a small tank. I called out to them and asked for directions to Sri Bhagavan's ashram. Fortunately for me they turned out to be two of Sri Bhagavan's devotees.

The path to Skandashram, taken in the late 1940s. Skandashram is the dark patch of trees near the top of the photo.

Noticing my tired face and my Tamil mixed with Malayalam, they said, very sympathetically, 'You look very tired. Have a bath in this tank. Afterwards, if you climb by this route you will reach

The Power of the Presence

Skandashram. If you go and stay there, we will fetch some food so that you can eat.'

I followed their advice, had a bath in the tank and got rid of my outer dirt. Then, like a calf seeking its mother, I hastened to Skandashram to get rid of my inner impurities. As I approached Sri Bhagavan for the first time, my mind was in a state of great ecstasy.

I had thought a lot about how I should prostrate and how I should conduct myself before Sri Bhagavan. I finally decided to take as upadesa [spiritual instruction from the Guru] whatever Sri Bhagavan uttered to me first. I reached Skandashram and felt a physical thrill when I saw Sri Bhagavan for the first time. At the moment of my arrival three devotees – my friend Ramakrishna Swami, Perumal Swami and Akhandananda – were prostrating to Sri Bhagavan, so I too prostrated. Ramakrishna Swami was both surprised and delighted to see me.

He told Sri Bhagavan, 'He has come from my village. He has been a sadhu ever since he was a young boy. He is the one who sent me here.'

Sri Bhagavan nodded his head as if he were somehow giving his approval.

Ramakrishna Swami (top left) with Bhagavan (bottom right). The photo was taken near Virupaksha Cave before Kunju Swami arrived.

Ramakrishna Swami then said to me, 'You stay here for some time. We are going down the hill but we will be back soon.'

I learned later that a devotee called Annamalai Swami, who had been Sri Bhagavan's attendant, had died of plague on that day and that the three devotees I had seen prostrating were going off to bury him.

As they were leaving I heard someone sobbing in an adjoining room. I looked inside and saw an elderly woman lamenting, unable to bear her grief.

She called out, 'How unjust! This Annamalai, who was a gem of a man, has passed away!' A man was sitting by her side.

Turning towards them and pointing to me, Sri Bhagavan consoled them both by saying, 'Why are you grieving unnecessarily? To replace that first son another son has just arrived.'

At the time I could not make out the meaning of those golden words. Only later was I able to understand their true meaning. I soon learnt that the elderly woman sitting inside was Sri Bhagavan's mother and that the person with her was Sri Bhagavan's brother.

Later that morning, at about 8 a.m., a devotee, Ramalingam Pillai, who was staying at Skandashram and was also known as Turiyananda, gave me an earthen bowl, took one for himself, and sat with me under a tree to eat. Sri Bhagavan also sat on a nearby platform with a bowl. Venu Ammal, Echammal's sister, who was giving food to Sri Bhagavan, had that day sent us rasam and rice to eat.

At the end of the meal everyone left except Sri Bhagavan and me. Sri Bhagavan, who had not spoken to me till then, took some flour from a small tin, put it in a pot, poured some water from his kamandalu [a water pot made from a coconut shell] over it, mixed it with a spoon and then heated the mixture on the charcoal stove that was kept there to heat the rooms. Thinking that Sri Bhagavan was preparing some kaya kalpa [magical concoction], I sat quietly, hoping to get some myself. After the contents had turned into a paste, Sri Bhagavan took the vessel off the stove and poured a portion of it onto a plate. Then he got up and lifted an upturned basket. Four puppies rushed out and raced towards the gruel on the plate. Thinking that it might be too hot for them, Sri Bhagavan tried to ward them off but was unable to do so.

The Power of the Presence

Chinnaswami (Bhagavan's younger brother) and Bhagavan's mother, Azhagammal, sitting near Skandashram.

Sri Bhagavan, who had not spoken to me till then, called out to me, 'Catch hold of the four!'

I immediately caught hold of them.

Then, after the gruel had cooled down a little, Sri Bhagavan said, 'Let them go one by one'.

As I had resolved to take Sri Bhagavan's first words to me as upadesa, I took the first command to mean 'Catch hold of the four mahavakyas'.

Releasing the pups one by one I took the second command to mean, 'Give up desires and attachments one by one'.

The puppies had their fill and wandered off to play. A few minutes later one of them urinated. Sri Bhagavan got up immediately, poured some water from his kamandalu and cleaned up the mess with an old gunny bag. I felt a strong urge to do this work myself, but since I felt that it was not proper on my part to do so without being asked, I just sat quietly, feeling slightly apprehensive. As Sri Bhagavan came back to sit down, another puppy urinated. Sri Bhagavan saw that I was getting restless and asked me to clean up the mess by saying the single word, 'Wipe'. I got up and cleaned the spot with water.

'Wipe the mind and keep it clean.'

I felt that this was my third upadesa. Having got the upadesa I had desired, I felt extremely happy and tranquil.

I thought that this was an opportune moment to speak to Sri Bhagavan because he was sitting quietly and we were alone together. I told him in Malayalam all about my boyhood, how I had been doing japa and giving spiritual discourses. I told him that I had taken lessons in Vedanta because my father had wished me to do so, and I also told him about my experiences with Elapulli Kuppandi Swami, the man who had taught me Vedanta. I explained that I had lived for a long time in a state of confusion, without getting any spiritual experiences. Then, I said, I had gained great peace of mind merely by hearing about Sri Bhagavan.

Sri Bhagavan listened to everything with a smile. I concluded by asking him what I should do to get over my confusion and gain clarity.

He replied, 'You have studied Kaivalyam. One of the verses says, "If he [the disciple] comes to see the individual self and its substratum, ... then he becomes the substratum, Brahman, and escapes rebirths. Should you know yourself, no harm will befall you. As you have asked, I have told you this.'"

I then asked him how I could know myself and he replied, 'First know who you are'.

'How can I know who I am?' I asked.

'See from where thoughts arise,' answered Sri Bhagavan.

'But how is this to be done?' I enquired.

Sri Bhagavan first replied, 'Turn your mind inwards and see in the Heart,' and then afterwards reverted to his natural state of silence.

As we sat silently together, Sri Bhagavan's gracious look was fixed on me. At that very moment all my confusion ceased and I experienced a peace and bliss I had never experienced before.

Annamalai Swami, the attendant who had been buried on the day I arrived, had composed 100 songs on Sri Bhagavan. In the years following his death his brother and some other devotees used to perform aradhana [an anniversary puja] at his samadhi on the date of his death. They would sing the 100 songs in Sri Bhagavan's presence and would then join in the special bhiksha that was always arranged on that day. The anniversary was commemorated in this way for many years. I always regarded the day I had Sri Bhagavan's darshan for the first time as my second birthday. Because this darshan took place on the day that Annamalai Swami attained samadhi, I used to think that the special bhiksha arranged every year on that day was also a feast to celebrate this second birth.

The Power of the Presence

Bhagavan (left) sitting at Skandashram in front of the ashram kitchen. Kunju Swami is sitting on the right, Bhagavan's mother is in the foreground, and Ramanatha Brahmachari is standing next to the tree.

Annamalai Swami was not the only devotee to get bubonic plague. On the day I arrived another devotee, Ramanatha Brahmachari, was in great pain because his plague boil had just burst. I learned later that about a week before my arrival, when the disease had just begun to affect him, Sri Bhagavan had asked Ramanatha Brahmachari to stay at Skandashram while he went round the hill with Perumal Swami, Rangaswami Iyengar and a few others. On the way, while they were resting for a short while at Pachaiamman Temple, Perumal Swami and Iyengar Swami informed Sri Bhagavan of a plan they had thought of earlier.

‘Since Ramanatha Brahmachari is afflicted with a contagious disease,’ they said, ‘we should all stay here at Pachaiamman Temple. We can take him food and look after him from here.’

Sri Bhagavan, who was compassion incarnate, was upset by their petty-mindedness.

‘What a wonderful suggestion! He came to me while he was still a young boy. He is totally dependent on us. Is it proper for us to leave him alone in this condition and come to stay here? If you are afraid, you can all stay here. I will go and stay with him. When you bring food for him, you can bring me some as well.’

When the devotees heard this they remained silent, fearing to pursue the matter anymore.

Because the plague had driven away most of the inhabitants of the town, visitors to Sri Bhagavan were very few. I was therefore left alone with Sri Bhagavan for much of the time. While we were together he often used to look at me, and as he did so, I became aware that his eyes had a strange brilliance and fascination in them. Whenever I looked into his eyes for any length of time I saw a bright effulgence. I could not say from where it came but it had the effect of making me forget everything. It was not like sleep for I was fully aware. I was also filled with a strange peace and bliss. After each experience I would come back to my normal physical state with a shudder. This occurred again and again on each of the eighteen days that I stayed with Sri Bhagavan. I was like someone intoxicated. I was absolutely indifferent to everything, had no curiosity to see anything, no desires whatsoever. Whatever activities I did, I did them all in a very mechanical way.

So long as I stayed in the presence of Sri Bhagavan, I continued to have these experiences of peace and bliss. Because of the greatness of the presence of Sri Bhagavan I was able to experience the tranquil state of abiding firmly in the Heart.

After experiencing this state for some days the thought occurred to me, 'Here, in order to join in all the daily routines, I have to interrupt my meditative state. Now that I have this firm experience I could remain uninterruptedly in continuous meditation for days if I stayed at home.'

The Power of the Presence

Furthermore, I felt that it was a sin to eat food from the Guru without doing any service to him in return. When I conveyed my thoughts to Ramakrishna Swami, I found that he was in complete agreement with me. We informed Sri Bhagavan of our decision and went back to our homes in Kerala. We had decided in advance that when we reached home we would meditate in seclusion, observe silence and be immersed in samadhi. We also decided neither to speak to anyone nor to meet each other.

When I reached home I found that my parents, who had been in a very agitated state because they had no idea where I had gone, were extremely happy to see me. Ramakrishna and I stuck to our resolution by staying in our respective homes and observing silence. My parents did not mind the silence, or anything else that I did. They were quite content merely to have me at home.

As the days passed, the meditative state experienced in Sri Bhagavan's presence steadily declined. I slowly became my old restless self. I did not have any new experiences, nor could I get into samadhi. Only then did I realise how ignorant I had been.

I was greatly shaken by this disappointment, but I could not reveal to anyone what had happened. Then, one night, while I was dwelling on my disappointment, Ramakrishna Swami came to my place and revealed that his experience had been the same as mine. We both felt ashamed of our foolishness that led us to believe that we had achieved in a few days the state that aspirants of ancient days attained only after many years of striving in the immediate presence of great sages. By losing the state we had formerly experienced, we also realised fully the greatness of Sri Bhagavan's presence. Feeling that it would be pointless for us to stay any longer at home, we decided that our only hope was to take refuge in Sri Bhagavan at Tiruvannamalai. After fixing a date for our departure, Ramakrishna Swami left for his house. My parents were shocked when I informed them of my decision, for it was contrary to all their expectations. They made a strenuous effort to keep me at home, but they were unable to make me change my mind.

I pacified them a little by saying, 'The fact that one of your four sons is following a sadhu's path will bring only honour and merit to you and not any loss.'

I added, 'I am not leaving without informing you as I did earlier. This time I would like to go with your consent and blessings. At Tiruvannamalai I am going to be living in the presence of Sri Bhagavan. You will know where I am and you can come and see me any time you like.'

After I had consoled them for some time in this way, they gave me their permission to leave.

Ramakrishna Swami and I reached Tiruvannamalai in two days. On seeing us, Sri Bhagavan looked at us as though he was joyfully welcoming us. We too felt very happy. When I had come to Sri Bhagavan for the first time, I had felt uneasy, thinking that it was a sin to eat at the Guru's place without performing any service in return. On my second visit Sri Bhagavan ensured that I did not have any such feelings by accepting me totally and by blessing me with the opportunity to serve him. Perumal Swami, who used to get hot water ready for Sri Bhagavan's bath, wash his clothes, rub oil on his feet before he retired to bed at night, and perform other personal services to him had decided to leave for a few days. Before he left he selected me and asked me to perform these same services. As I had been involved in spiritual matters from an early age, he was confident that I would carry out these tasks without committing any mistakes. Had I come two days later, I would have lost this great fortune. I then realised the significance of what Sri Bhagavan had said when I had visited him for the first time. He had pointed me out to his mother, who was lamenting over the death of Annamalai Swami, and said that I had come in his place.

When Sri Bhagavan accepted my services I felt overcome by his solicitude and graciousness. I cannot forget the wonderful experience of being drawn to Tiruvannamalai by Sri Bhagavan. By 1977 [when this account was written], I had completed fifty-seven years of residence in Tiruvannamalai, but the memory of the joy experienced on my arrival still fills me and thrills me whenever I remember it.

The Power of the Presence

Ramakrishna Swami was given the responsibility of attending to outside affairs, so we were both able to serve Sri Bhagavan and his ashram. He also attended on Sri Bhagavan whenever I was not around.

One day, while I was doing some work for Sri Bhagavan, I asked him why the experiences I had felt in his presence during my first visit had not continued after my return to Kerala but instead had steadily declined and finally ceased. By way of a reply Sri Bhagavan asked me to read verses eighty-three to ninety-three of the first section of Kaivalya Navaneeta, telling me that the answer to my question could be found in those verses. The verses are as follows:

- 83 On hearing this [instruction from the Master] the disciple, loyal to the instructions of the Master, discarded the five sheaths and the blank [mind], realised the Self as 'I am Brahman', went beyond that and remained as perfect being.
- 84 At the glance of the Master, who was grace incarnate, the worthy disciple sank into the ocean of bliss and merged as the undivided whole, as pure consciousness, free from the body, the organs and all else, with mind made perfect so that he became the true Self, unaware while awake.
- 85 After the blessed disciple had remained in that state for a long time, his mind gently turned outwards. Then he saw his glorious Master before him. His eyes were filled with tears of joy. He was full of love and fell at the feet of the Master. He rose up, went round the Master with folded hands and spoke to him:
- 86 'Lord, you are the reality remaining as my innermost Self, ruling me during all my countless incarnations! Glory to you who have put on an external form in order to instruct me! I do not see how I can repay your grace for having liberated me. Glory! Glory to your holy feet!'
- 87 The Master beamed on him as he spoke, drew him near and said very lovingly, 'To stay fixed in the Self, without the

- three kinds of obstacles obstructing your experience, is the highest return you can render me'.
- 88 'My Lord! Can such realisation as has transcended the dual perception of "You" and "I", and found the Self to be entire and all pervading, fail me at any time?'
- The Master replied, "The truth that "I am Brahman" is realised from the scriptures or by the grace of the Master, but it cannot be firm in the face of obstruction.
- 89 'Ignorance, uncertainty and wrong knowledge are obstacles resulting from long-standing habits in the innumerable incarnations of the past which cause trouble [and make] the fruits of realisation slip away. Therefore root them out by hearing the truth, reasoning and meditation [sravana, manana, nididhyasana].
- 90 'Defective realisation will not put an end to bondage. Therefore devote yourself to hearing the truth, reasoning and meditation and root out ignorance, uncertainty and wrong knowledge.
- 91 'Ignorance veils the truth that the Self is Brahman and shows forth multiplicity instead. Uncertainty is the confusion resulting from lack of firm faith in the words of the Master. The illusion that the evanescent world is a reality and that the body is the self is wrong knowledge. So say the sages.
- 92 'Hearing the truth is to revert the mind repeatedly to the teaching: "That thou art". Reasoning is rational investigation of the meaning of the text, as already heard. Meditation is one-pointedness of mind.
- 93 'If every day you do these, you will surely gain liberation. The practice must be kept up so long as the sense of knower and knowledge persists. No effort is necessary thereafter. Remaining as pure, eternal consciousness, untainted like the ether and thus liberated while alive, one will live forever as That, after being disembodied also.'

Sri Bhagavan then summarised the verses and explained their meaning to me.

During the course of his explanation he remarked, "The

The Power of the Presence

experience [of the Self] can occur in the presence of the Guru, but it may not last. Doubts will rise again and again and in order to clear them, the disciple should continue to study, think and practise. Sravana, manana and nididhyasana should be done until the distinction between knower, known and knowing no longer arises.'

After Sri Bhagavan had explained all this to me I decided to stay always in his presence and to carry out the practices he prescribed.

In those early days of my stay at Skandashram, as I always used to remain close to Sri Bhagavan, I found that I could get all my doubts cleared merely by listening to all the answers to other devotees' questions. Moreover, by listening to all these answers I was able to learn many new aspects of Sri Bhagavan's teachings. I rarely had to ask a question myself. Usually, if I was waiting for an opportune moment to raise a question on some spiritual topic, another devotee would ask Sri Bhagavan that very same question. Sri Bhagavan's answer would then clear the doubts of both of us. This method of acquiring knowledge is known in the scriptures as daiva gathi. A good example of daiva gathi can be found in Vasishtam where it is said that King Janaka got his doubts cleared and attained knowledge by hearing the conversation of some siddhas.

In books such as Vedanta Chudamani three ways of getting realisation, daiva gathi, viveka gathi and viraktha gathi, have been mentioned. To approach a Sadguru and to obtain knowledge by both learning the spiritual texts and by practising discrimination is called viveka gathi. Viraktha gathi is the instantaneous dawn of knowledge, like a bolt of lightning, irrespective of age and environment. Jnanis such as the Buddha, Pattinathar and Sri Bhagavan are examples of this viraktha gathi. Vasishtam, an authoritative text, proclaims, 'Like fruit falling unexpectedly from above, true knowledge arises easily'.

A person who goes to have the darshan of a realised soul without any desire finds the latter answering the spiritual questions of his disciples. On hearing them, because of past merits, realisation dawns immediately like the lighting up of an electric bulb at the press of a switch. This is known as daiva gathi. The good karmas performed in many past births become the cause of attaining knowledge by any of the three ways mentioned above. Many other scriptural texts proclaim the same truth.

Stories from Gurumurtam and Virupaksha Cave

Palaniswami, one of Sri Bhagavan's earliest attendants, was born at Vadavanur, near Palghat in Kerala. At the time when Sri Bhagavan first went to stay in Gurumurtam in the 1890s Palaniswami was also living in Tiruvannamalai as a sadhu, performing daily worship to the Vinayaka image that was installed on Ayyankulam Street. When he heard people speaking very highly of Sri Bhagavan, then known as Brahmana Swami, he went and had his darshan. After only one darshan he was filled with peace and bliss. From that time on, service to Brahmana Swami became his sole concern. He was older than Sri Bhagavan by about thirty years, so when he saw the austere young swami radiating the light of knowledge in silence, he felt a fatherly affection towards him and started looking after him with great care. If Palaniswami happened to go out, then, in order to stop visitors from troubling Sri Bhagavan, he would lock the door of Gurumurtam and return as quickly as possible. At that time in Sri Bhagavan's life, no one could approach Brahmana Swami without first getting permission from Palaniswami. Since Sri Bhagavan was in those days performing severe tapas and was unable to fend for himself, this kind of protection appeared to have been arranged by Sri Arunachaleswara himself.

Palaniswami (top right) sitting next to Bhagavan's mother outside Virupaksha Cave. The man in the foreground on the right is Sivaprakasam Pillai, the devotee who recorded the teachings in 'Who am I?' The remaining devotee (bottom left) is Iswara Swami.

The Power of the Presence

When Sri Bhagavan moved to Virupaksha Cave after a year-and-a-half stay at Gurumurtam, Palaniswami also went with him. Palaniswami had always lived very simply: he only ever wore an ordinary towel around his waist and never kept more than two at a time. The vessels he used were all made of baked mud. There was not even a metal tumbler among them. When the devotees who came to Virupaksha Cave to see Sri Bhagavan asked for water, they too had to drink from an earthen mug. Someone suggested that he keep a proper tumbler for the sake of those who did not like to drink in this way, but he ignored their advice. Even when devotees offered to buy one, he refused to accept their suggestion. Because he did not accept anything from anyone, he could act in a straightforward way without fear or favour. He had the courage to ignore everything in the world except his service to Sri Bhagavan.

At the beginning of Sri Bhagavan's stay in Virupaksha Cave some sadhus who had already established ashrams on the hill found many of the devotees who used to come to them beginning to go to Virupaksha Cave for Sri Bhagavan's darshan. Fearing that this might result in a decline in their reputation, they started harassing Sri Bhagavan in several ways. Sri Bhagavan knew what they were doing, but out of compassion he felt that he should not retaliate and cause them any trouble and anxiety. Instead, he decided to leave the mountain and live in a nearby forest.

On several occasions Sri Bhagavan had had an unusual experience in which his body would disappear in a flash and disperse into its component atoms. A little later a smoke-like form would appear and the atoms would come together in a form that resembled particles of mist. Finally, the body would reappear in its normal form. Sri Bhagavan used to have this experience whenever he remained in the same position for a long time or when his body got emaciated because he was not taking enough food. This state, in which the body disintegrates into atoms and merges with the five elements, is known as 'pranava body'.

When Sri Bhagavan left Virupaksha Cave to avoid the harassment of the sadhus, he decided first to go to the forest near Pachaiaimman Temple, on the north-east side of the hill, and fast so that he could enter the state of pranava body. As he was entering the forest, Vasudeva Sastry saw Bhagavan. At that time he was a boy studying in the local Veda Patasala, a school for teaching brahmin boys vedic traditions.

He ran up to him and said, 'You have come here all alone. Let us go back to Virupaksha Cave.'

Sri Bhagavan replied, 'I will return after staying in the forest for a couple of days. You go back by yourself.'

Vasudeva, who was unwilling to leave Sri Bhagavan alone in the forest, began to cry, so Sri Bhagavan pacified him by saying that he would come back soon. He sent him back and walked a little distance towards the forest.

Bhagavan sitting with a group of devotees at Pachaiaimman Koil around the time that this story took place.

The Power of the Presence

Before he was able to disappear into the trees, Sri Bhagavan encountered a bullock cart containing a passenger – Sri Sattappa Swamigal, the head of Isanya Math. He was returning from a journey on which he had been inspecting the land that belonged to the math. He recognised Sri Bhagavan, alighted from the cart and walked rapidly towards him in order to greet him. He was very happy to meet Brahmana Swami so unexpectedly.

He called out to Sri Bhagavan, ‘Swami! I did not think I would be meeting you here. It is my great good fortune that I got your darshan today. For a long time I have been eager to take you to our math, but since I felt that you would not agree to come, I have not previously asked. Now that I have this golden opportunity, you must certainly come.’

Sri Bhagavan, who did not like to visit such places, tried to decline his invitation, but Sri Sattappa Swamigal ignored his refusal. Sri Bhagavan was weak and thin on account of his long and arduous tapas, so when the well-built swami lifted him up and put him in the cart, he was unable to offer any resistance. The head of the math took Sri Bhagavan, the treasure found on the way, to his math, offered him a special seat, fed him and treated him with great reverence and devotion. Sri Bhagavan did not like the special treatment that was being given to him.

He told the head of the math, ‘I am unable to accept all this fuss. I am leaving.’

Sri Sattappa Swamigal dissuaded him by saying, ‘You can stay here in any way you like. Just please be kind enough to stay with us for some more time.’

Sri Bhagavan found that he could not go against their wishes and ended up spending one week in the math. At the end of that period, finding that he could not stay there any longer, he slipped out of the math early one morning and went to stay in the Pavalakundru Temple, a shrine located on top of a large hillock on the northern side of Tiruvannamalai.

Sri Sattappa Swami was extremely disappointed when he discovered that Sri Bhagavan had left, but when he came to learn that Sri Bhagavan was staying nearby at Pavalakundru, he came, saw him and arranged to send him food every day via the chief of the Pavalakundru Math, who also belonged to the Isanya Math. We must be eternally grateful to Sri Sattappa Swamigal: his limitless devotion bound Sri Bhagavan and prevented him from getting into a state, the pranava body, where we could not have seen him. He thus gave all of us the opportunity of redeeming ourselves by having his darshan.<sup>2</sup>

This feeding arrangement was only a temporary one. During many of the years that Sri Bhagavan lived in Virupaksha Cave, he received food from the Sadhu's Choultry in town. This was an institution that gave free food every day to sadhus. The founder of the choultry, Karaikkudi S. N. Sattappa Chettiar, and his wife used to have food prepared under their direct supervision and offer it to all the sadhus who came there. This Chettiar was very devoted to Sri Bhagavan and came to see him regularly. One day, when he came as usual to have darshan, he appealed to Sri Bhagavan to take at least a handful of cooked rice from this sadhu's choultry every <sup>2</sup> A somewhat different account of this story was told by Bhagavan himself in Letters from Sri Ramanasramam (27.6.47). In that version he was on a pradakshina when he was accosted by Sattappa Swami. According to Bhagavan, it was Sattappa Swami's disciples who picked him up and put him in the cart, not Sattappa Swami himself. In this account Bhagavan dates the event at around 1904.

---

A third account, told by Vasudeva Sastry, can be found in Day By Day With Bhagavan (5.10.46). Bhagavan confirmed that this was one of three attempts he made to run away from his ashrams on the hill. Vasudeva Sastry's account differs in important respects from both Bhagavan's and Kunju Swami's. Though it was told in Bhagavan's presence, Bhagavan did not appear to contradict him.

Kunju Swami seems to be confusing details from two of the 'running away' stories. The first escape bid was when Bhagavan ran away from the sadhus who were pestering him on the hill. The second was the one in which he was put in the cart.

I spoke to Kunju Swami about the pranava body since it does not appear anywhere else in the ashram literature. He conceded that he had got the story second-hand, and not from Bhagavan himself. He told me that he had never personally seen Bhagavan enter or leave this state but added that the story was a matter of common knowledge when he was staying at Skandashram.

Pavalakundru Temple. The slope of Arunachala can be seen behind the temple on the right side of the photo.

day. He said that it would be a great blessing to them all if he did so. The request was accepted and from then on Palaniswami used to fetch cooked rice from their choultry every day.

After returning to Virupaksha Cave Palaniswami would put the food aside and then read with great difficulty one chapter from the Malayalam version of Adhyatma Ramayana. He would only serve food to Sri Bhagavan after he had completed his reading. When Sri Bhagavan had eaten, he would eat whatever remained.

This Adhyatma Ramayana, composed by Thunjath Ramanujan Ezhutacchan, generally regarded as the father of Malayalam literature, is held in great veneration in Kerala, Palaniswami's home state. Pious people there read a part of it every day before eating their food.

As Sri Bhagavan became better known, devotees would come from town or further afield, and they too had to be fed. On such occasions, because of Palaniswami's slow reading, they would be kept waiting for their food. Sri Bhagavan felt that it was not good to keep hungry people waiting.

With the idea of avoiding this inconvenience, he called to Sri Palaniswami one day, 'Palaniswami, must you read this chapter yourself? Or will you be satisfied if you hear it read by someone else?’

Palaniswami replied, ‘It is enough if I hear it read’.

The next day Sri Bhagavan took the book and asked Palaniswami to explain the sounds of the letters to him and found that most of the Malayalam script was a combination of Tamil and granta [a script that many Tamilians used to write Sanskrit] characters, both of which were already known to him from his school days at Madurai. He learned from Palaniswami the few letters he did not know and then began to read daily from the Adhyatma Ramayana. He mastered the script quickly and was able to read out portions of the book very fluently within three days.

His proficiency was not limited to reading. He mastered the language almost immediately, to the astonishment of everyone. Many natives of Kerala, when they came to the ashram, were taken aback on hearing him speak in faultless Malayalam. As his proficiency in reading Malayalam increased, Sri Bhagavan read other works in that language such as Yoga Vasishtam. He was so deeply moved by some passages in it, he often could not proceed with the reading. His identification with the characters was so complete, he forgot he was reading a book.

When he had fully mastered the language, he began to write Malayalam poetry. He translated Upadesa Saram and Ulladu Narpadu<sup>3</sup> into Malayalam verses so well, even Malayalam scholars hesitated before suggesting any changes in them. I once took some of these Malayalam verses composed by Sri Bhagavan to a well-known Malayalam professor for his opinion. The professor marvelled at the purity of diction achieved by a writer whose mother tongue was not Malayalam but, after much hesitation, he ventured to point to a few expressions here and there that he thought were not quite in accordance with Malayalam usage.

Sri Bhagavan used to master the contents of any book he read very quickly. He would go through a book, glancing here and there, and then put it down. But if anyone wanted an explanation of any particular point in it, he was always ready with it. His memory was extraordinary. He would get a poem by heart after reading it once or twice. He used to say that he knew which stanza followed which by the sequence of sense. It is no wonder that he learned Malayalam so quickly and so thoroughly!

---

<sup>3</sup> These works were composed in the late 1920s. By then Bhagavan had been a fluent Malayalam speaker for more than twenty years.

The Power of the Presence

Sri Bhagavan wrote Upadesa Saram in four different languages. The Telugu and Sanskrit versions are in couplets, the Tamil in three-line stanzas, the Malayalam, in four-line verses. Even Muruganar, if he had any doubts about the meaning of a particular verse of Upadesa Saram, would refer to the expanded Malayalam version. The Malayalam composition has another feature that the others lack. Spiritual treatises usually conclude with a phalasruti, one or more verses which describe the benefits that will accrue to those reading the work. Up till the time that Sri Bhagavan composed Upadesa Saram in Malayalam, he had avoided giving phalasrutis to any of his works, though he had translated phalasrutis into Tamil from Sanskrit in works such as Dakshinamurti Stotra. However, in the Malayalam Upadesa Saram he added two phalasruti verses because he was requested to do so by Balakrishna Swami, a Malayali devotee.

I had a minor role in the composition of these Malayalam phalasrutis. One day, when I entered the hall, Sri Bhagavan showed me the first draft of these verses. I noticed the line 'O Girls! ... all of you dance and clap kummi along with this Upadesa Saram' and asked whether kummi was for womenfolk alone. Sri Bhagavan gave no answer.<sup>4</sup> told him, pointing at me, 'I have changed the word "girls" into "devotees" since he expressed a doubt'.

The next day when Muruganar entered the hall Sri Bhagavan

---

<sup>4</sup> Kummi means 'a rhythmical clapping'. The original Tamil version of this work, entitled Upadesa Undiyar, had in each verse a word that means 'jump and fly', possibly given as an invitation to celebrate the philosophy that was given out in the remainder of the verse. This particular style of poetry was derived from Manikkavachagar, a Tamil saint who composed mystical poetry about a thousand years ago. Many of Manikkavachagar's poems had refrains, similar to 'jump and fly', that came from children's games, particularly those played by young girls. The kummi generally indicates a metre or tempo. In this context it is the rhythmical clapping that accompanies the dance. Though the 'jump and fly' refrain is rarely translated, it adds an element of joy and celebration to what is otherwise a rather dry philosophical text.

Then, turning to me, he asked, 'Are you satisfied?'

This is the final draft of the two Malayalam verses that Sri Bhagavan felt obliged to correct because of my query:

Being well established in Self-abidance, joyfully sing this Upadesa Saram, clapping one's hands in the kummi dance.
Freedom from all misery and eternal bliss will be attained.
There is no doubt about this.

O devotees! So that misery may leave completely without afflicting you, and so that bliss may be obtained, all of you dance and clap kummi along with this Upadesa Saram.

It was at Virupaksha Cave that Sri Bhagavan acquired his vast erudition. Palaniswami used to borrow books such as Kaivalyam, Vedanta Chudamani and Jnana Vasishtam from Nagalinga Swami, a devotee who lived in town. As there were not many devotees in those days, Sri Bhagavan could read the books in Virupaksha Cave without being disturbed. Going through the books he was surprised to find his own state described and extolled in great detail. He has said that while he was reading those books he felt as if he were suddenly remembering something he had long forgotten. Palaniswami also studied the books with Bhagavan. Over a period of six years he was able to obtain a great knowledge of the scriptures.

In later years, when additional devotees started staying with Sri Bhagavan in Virupaksha Cave, the food obtained from the sadhu's choultry was found to be insufficient for everyone. The devotees then decided that they would get their food by begging in town. Each day they would go to town in the late afternoon to beg for and collect food.<sup>5</sup> Later that day, they dined on the bhiksha food back at Virupaksha Cave and any leftovers were used the next morning. Instead of waiting in front of each house and asking for food, which is the traditional way that religious mendicants beg in India, the devotees would walk along each street singing Akshara Malai, a hymn composed by Adi-Sankara. It was only necessary to beg in the evenings because the food eaten at midday was brought by Echammal, Mudaliar Patti, Kannammal and others.

---

<sup>5</sup> Begging for food in this way is called 'going for bhiksha'. Bhiksha is the food that is offered.

The Power of the Presence

When the householders in town heard this Sankara song being sung, they would know that the group was Sri Bhagavan's devotees. They would then come out of their houses and offer clean, fresh food. However, some local sadhus from the town came to hear about this routine. They started singing the same song and began collecting the ashram's food before Sri Bhagavan's devotees had even got to town. Only when Sri Bhagavan's devotees came singing for bbiksha did the householders realise that they had been deceived by the other sadhus.

The Arunachaleswara Temple with Arunachala in the background.

Palaniswami, Perumal Swami and some others went and told Sri Bhagavan that if he composed some other songs for their use while going for bhiksha, it would put an end to the problem caused by the other sadhus. They also told him that such songs would help those who offered bhiksha to identify the group. Acting on their suggestion and request, Sri Bhagavan composed Aksharamanamalai, a Tamil poem of 108 verses in praise of Arunachala. The devotees then began to sing it regularly when they went into town for bhiksha.<sup>6</sup>

The practice of going to town for bhiksha had stopped a few months before my arrival because most of the residents had abandoned the town to avoid catching the plague. The number of people staying at Skandashram had also fallen. A few weeks after I came, the danger of plague receded and Sama Iyer, Iswara Swami and several other devotees who had earlier left because of the plague returned.

In the early 1900s a new marriage hall was built in the big Arunachaleswara temple. When the Navaratri celebrations<sup>7</sup> were being conducted in it for the first time, Palaniswami went to watch. After witnessing the spectacle for some time he felt a desire to bring Sri Bhagavan along to witness the celebrations. He thought that Sri Bhagavan would like to see and enjoy the beautiful decorations that were adorning Sri Apeetakuchamba.<sup>8</sup> In those days Sri Bhagavan and Palaniswami were living alone in Virupaksha Cave. Thinking that he would easily be recognised in the temple if he were accompanied by Palaniswami or other devotees, Sri Bhagavan decided to go alone in disguise. Wearing Palaniswami's towel around his waist and putting a Vaishnavite mark on his forehead, he reached the temple at ten o'clock in <sup>6</sup> Bhagavan would occasionally joke that 'Aksharamanamalai fed us for many years'. See Day By Day With Bhagavan (9.12.45) for Bhagavan's own description of how the devotees begged while singing this song.

---

<sup>7</sup> Navaratri (meaning 'nine nights') is a ten-day festival, usually occurring in October, in which a different aspect of female divinity is worshipped on each day. The final culminating day, Vijayadasami, is a celebration of the triumph, through divine power, of good over evil.

<sup>8</sup> This is one of the local names of Parvati, the consort of Siva.

The Power of the Presence

the evening. He started off in a fit of enthusiasm, but because he was apprehensive that he might be recognised, he was constantly looking around him. He could not appreciate the beauty of the goddess because he was worrying too much about the possibility of being discovered. Although his going in disguise did not inconvenience anyone, he felt uneasy at practising even this small deception.

He had darshan of the goddess and was about to return home when a temple priest recognised him and exclaimed with delight, 'Hey! Hey! All of you come here and see! Brahmana Swami is giving darshan as Vishnu.'

The priest took the garland that was adorning the goddess and put it on Sri Bhagavan. All the other priests assembled to watch the scene. Sri Bhagavan found himself in an embarrassing situation and wanted to leave immediately but before he could do so, one of the priests put various items of prasada on a leaf and gave it to him. He accepted the leaf but immediately afterwards left the temple and returned to Virupaksha Cave. He never went back to the temple again.

Sri Bhagavan was sometimes looked down on by people who had had no direct experience of his greatness because he did not come from a traditional line of Gurus. Having learned that Sri Bhagavan had not accepted anyone as his Guru and had not taken sannyasa in the traditional way, a pandit knowledgeable in the sastras came from the Sringeri Math to meet Sri Bhagavan in Virupaksha Cave in order to persuade him to join his lineage. As Palaniswami had gone to the sadhu's choultry to fetch food, the pandit got an opportunity to speak to Sri Bhagavan for a whole hour about the greatness of initiation and the necessity of having a Guru. He conceded that Sri Bhagavan was already in a very high state, for he spoke at length on the lives of great incarnations such as Rama, Krishna, Adi-Sankara and many others and remarked that it was extremely rare to see a tapasvin<sup>9</sup> like Sri Bhagavan. Then, with great reverence and devotion, he held his palms together and made the following appeal to Sri Bhagavan.

---

<sup>9</sup> A tapasvin is someone who has performed or who is performing a lot of tapas. Tapas is arduous spiritual practice, often involving physical discomfort or bodily mortification.

‘Swami! As you are a brahmin, you must accept sannyasa in the traditional way. You already know everything, so what else is there that I can tell you? However, I am very eager to include you in the lineage of our Gurus. If Swami will give his permission, I am ready to make all the arrangements for his initiation into sannyasa. If you are not willing to wear full ochre robes, you must agree to wear at least an ochre loincloth.’

Sri Bhagavan listened to all this without saying anything. The pandit then left, saying that he was going to town, but he promised to come back by 3 p.m. that day.

Within fifteen minutes of his departure an elderly gentleman arrived with a small bundle and said to Sri Bhagavan with some excitement, ‘My train, which should have arrived here at 8 a.m., finally got here at ten. I have not had my bath, nor have I performed my sandhya vandanam [a set of prayers repeated thrice-daily by all brahmins]. Let me keep this bundle here. You can keep an eye on it for me. I will go, have my bath and be back soon.’

The man left his bundle and hurried away.

Sri Bhagavan was puzzled. ‘This person does not seem to have come here before,’ he thought, ‘but his face appears familiar. No one who knows me well would ask me to look after a bundle.’

Still wondering about the owner, he looked at the bundle and found that it contained a towel, some clothes and a few books. On seeing those books Sri Bhagavan, who usually never touched anything belonging to others, suddenly felt an intense urge to open the books and read them.<sup>10</sup> With great eagerness he untied

---

<sup>10</sup> I think Major Chadwick would disagree with Kunju Swami’s assertion that Bhagavan never touched other people’s possessions. The following extract is from A Sadhu’s Reminiscences of Ramana Maharshi, pp. 23-4:

‘In the early years of my stay I was living in the big room adjoining the ashram storeroom. Here Bhagavan often used to visit me, usually when he went out at about ten o’clock ... . If one carried on with what one was doing, then he would himself take a seat and talk quite naturally without the formality which usually surrounded him in the hall. I had no idea how lucky I was and how the bundle, looked at the topmost book and found it to be a copy of Arunachala Mahatmyam in the original Sanskrit.<sup>11</sup> Sri Bhagavan, who before that day had only come across the Arunachala Puranam written in Tamil, took the newly found book and opened it at random. Seeing two interesting verses on that page, he copied them on a piece of paper, put the book back and retied the bundle. Palaniswami then arrived with his food. After eating his food Sri Bhagavan looked for the bundle but could not find it anywhere. He asked Palaniswami about it but the latter replied that he had not seen any such bundle. The elderly person who had deposited it never came back and the mystery of the disappearing parcel was never solved.

The Power of the Presence

At 3 p.m. when the pandit returned Sri Bhagavan showed him the piece of paper on which he had copied the two verses from the Arunachala Mahatmyam:

What cannot be acquired without endless pains – the true import of Vedanta – is easily attained by all those who can directly sight this hill or even mentally think of it from afar.

I [Siva] ordain that residence within three yojanas [about thirty miles] of this hill shall by itself suffice to burn off all defects and effect union with the Supreme, even in the absence of initiation.

---

privileged, but I certainly appreciated the visits. He might pick up my pocket book and take everything out of it: a photograph, a membership card, and any odds and ends it might contain, remark on each thing and ask some question about it. It might have been embarrassing but luckily there was nothing questionable in the wallet. Not that Bhagavan would have minded, for there could be nothing questionable or otherwise for him.'

<sup>11</sup> This work, part of the Skanda Purana, is one of the principal records of the myths, legends and traditions associated with Arunachala. The Arunachala Puranam, mentioned in the next sentence, is a long Tamil poem that contains much of the same material.

These two verses were later translated into Tamil by Sri Bhagavan and are now in his Collected Works. After reading the verses the pandit prostrated humbly before Sri Bhagavan and took leave of him without bothering him any more on the subject of initiation. He went back to Sringeri and narrated this incident to Sri Narasimha Bharati Swamigal, the head of the math there.

The Swami was unhappy when he heard that one of his followers had unnecessarily pestered Sri Bhagavan to take initiation. He firmly ordered him not to engage in any such activities again.

There was another occasion when someone tried to initiate Sri Bhagavan. A sadhu called Bhagavatar Swami lived near Sri Bhagavan and often tried to make trouble for him. This man would travel to North India, where he would impersonate Sri Bhagavan. Claiming to be Ramana Maharshi, he would collect money from credulous people. Once, after a long absence, he suddenly appeared before Sri Bhagavan with a long beard and wearing a very strange dress.

Looking very serious, he told Sri Bhagavan, 'I am coming straight from the Himalayas. I had a dream in which the Lord appeared to me and commanded me, "Go back at once to Arunachala. My child Ramana is doing nothing. He is wasting his time. He should be taught some spiritual discipline. To start with, initiate him into this mantra."

"Then he gave me this mantra very secretly. Tomorrow I will come to initiate you. Have your bath and be ready.'

The next day Bhagavatar Swami came with great pomp and with all the materials needed for the initiation ceremony. Sri Bhagavan was again by himself. Bhagavatar began the ceremonies. At the appropriate moment he urged Sri Bhagavan to come forward and receive the mantra initiation. Sri Bhagavan was more amused than perturbed.

He smiled and said. 'You have been told by the Lord in your dream to give mantra initiation to me. Let the same Lord appear to me in my dream and bid me to take the mantra initiation from you. And then we will see.'

Because Sri Bhagavan was often alone in Virupaksha Cave, it was fairly easy for mischief-makers to come there and cause some kind of trouble. Two more instances spring to mind.

The Power of the Presence

In South India there was once a sadhu who would crush green chillies and smear the paste all over his body. This he did several times a day. He was known as Milakai Siddhar, or Chilli Swami. Chilli paste is such hot stuff, even if one merely touches it with a finger, there is an immediate burning sensation. This swami who could smear green chilli paste all over his body without feeling any discomfort was naturally famous.

One day, this sadhu's disciple came to Sri Bhagavan and found him alone. Palaniswami and Perumal Swami had gone to town on business. The disciple told Sri Bhagavan that since his master had this chilli bath very frequently, he felt he must give a similar bath to Sri Bhagavan as well. Sri Bhagavan did not say 'yes' or 'no'. He just kept quiet. That was his invariable response when people came to pester him with silly suggestions. Taking Sri Bhagavan's silence for consent, he prepared the chilli paste and quickly smeared it on every inch of Sri Bhagavan's body.

This is how Sri Bhagavan described the experience: 'What to do? He went on smearing the green chilli paste over my body. For the first few minutes my body felt severe burning sensations, but after a while the whole system felt cool. I actually liked it. It was so pleasant. There were no after effects, then or later.'

On yet another occasion when Palaniswami and Perumal Swami had gone to town, leaving Sri Bhagavan all alone, a few fierce-looking bairagis [wandering sadhus]<sup>12</sup> came to Virupaksha Cave. Finding Sri Bhagavan seated alone, they told him with great vehemence, 'We have come straight from the Vindhya Hills. We had darshan of the great siddha there. He has commanded us to bring you over there. So, we are taking you along with us back to the Vindhya, as ordered by the great siddha.'

Sri Bhagavan, as usual remained silent and unmoved. But the bairagis, as was their wont, started behaving in a very noisy way. Some woodcutters who witnessed this drama went down the hill and told Perumal Swami about the wild-looking bairagis who were troubling Sri Bhagavan. Perumal Swami immediately came back, found out what they wanted and then went back to town. Returning some time later he brought with him a big vessel and tins of oil. He put them in front of the ruffians and started gathering firewood. Neither the bairagis nor Sri Bhagavan could make any sense of Perumal Swami's strange behaviour. The former, of course, did not even know who Perumal Swami was.

---

<sup>12</sup> Though they style themselves as wandering sadhus, bairagis have a reputation for wild and undisciplined behaviour. Many of them regularly take drugs such as cannabis, ostensibly as a sacrament.

Front row, left to right: Perumal Swami, Ramakrishna Swami, Muruganar and Bhagavan.

When, curiosity getting the better of them, they enquired who he was and what he was up to, Perumal Swami put the big vessel on the fire and said, 'I belong to the next village. I had a vision last night of the great siddha of the Vindhya. He commanded me, "Go to Virupaksha Cave. You will find some bairagis there. They are siddhas too, having great powers. Pour boiling oil on them and they will be alive and untouched by the oil." To my great surprise, when I came to this cave, as told by the siddha, you were all here.

The Power of the Presence

What a fool I was to doubt the holy words of the great siddha! Immediately I rushed to town and brought the vessel and the tins of oil. Would I not incur a curse if I disobey the siddha?’

When Perumal Swami went inside the cave to put his clothes there, the bairagis, thinking he was serious, took to their heels. Sri Bhagavan and Perumal Swami both had a big laugh as they watched them retreat down the hill.

In Sri Bhagavan’s early years at Arunachala, before he started to get famous, many people first got to hear of his greatness through the word-of-mouth recommendations of famous sadhus and swamis. One such man, Narayana Swami, was partly responsible for causing Sri Bhagavan’s reputation to spread. He used to come to Virupaksha Cave regularly for Sri Bhagavan’s darshan from 1914 onwards. All of us used to address him respectfully as ‘Navanna Swami’. He was very well known in Kovilur Math and on his visits to Tiruvannamalai he used to stay in Isanya Math and visit Sri Bhagavan at Virupaksha Cave. He was a genuine renunciant, endowed with clear spiritual knowledge, and he had a unique way of teaching Vedanta. During one of his visits Sri Bhagavan handed him a sheet of paper on which he had just then completed copying Arunachala Ashtakam. On that particular day some math heads who knew a lot of Vedanta had also come along with a few other devotees. Navanna Swami read the verses out loud at a slow steady pace so that he could follow their meaning and others could hear him. When he came to the film simile in verse six, he asked Sri Bhagavan for clarification as this analogy was not to be found in the ancient vedantic works. After hearing Sri Bhagavan’s explanation, he understood the import of the verse and also realised the true state of Sri Bhagavan. The verse, which explains how the mind creates the world, goes as follows:

You alone exist, O Heart, the radiance of awareness! In You a mysterious power dwells, a power which without You is nothing. From it [this power of manifestation] there proceeds, along with a perceiver, a series of subtle shadowy thoughts that, lit by the reflected light of the mind amid the whirl of prarabdha, appear within us as a shadowy spectacle of the world and appear without as the world perceived by the five senses as a film is projected through a lens. Whether perceived or unperceived, these [thoughts] are nothing apart from You, O Hill of Grace.<sup>13</sup>

Till then Navanna Swami had merely thought of Sri Bhagavan as a great tapasvin. On reading these verses he came to realise that Sri Bhagavan was a ssthitaprajna [one who is established in the supreme state of wisdom] who had vedantic experience and the clarity of both direct and indirect knowledge. The other math heads who were with him that day also realised Sri Bhagavan's greatness. Subsequently, many others came to know of the greatness of Sri Bhagavan through the recommendations of these people. As a result, scholar-sadhus started coming to see Sri Bhagavan.

During the period when I was serving Sri Bhagavan at Skandashram, this same Narayana Swami, who had come there for Sri Bhagavan's darshan, called me aside and instructed me on how to serve the Guru by explaining in detail a verse from Vedanta Chudamani. Aptam, he said, is to learn the scriptural rules of conduct appropriate to a disciple so that one can serve the Guru favourably. Angam is to find out the needs of the Guru's body so that one can serve him accordingly. Dhanam is to look after ashram properties such as cattle, plants and trees with infinitely greater care than that bestowed by householders on their own property. Sad bhava is to view everything as Guru swarupa [the real form or nature of the Guru].

After explaining clearly and in detail all the above-mentioned

---

<sup>13</sup> I once asked Kunju Swami how Bhagavan managed to acquire a working knowledge of film projection systems during the early years of this century. He was using this analogy in Self-Enquiry as early as 1902. Arunachala Ashtakam was composed in 1913.

Kunju Swami laughed and replied, 'I don't know. We always used to wonder where he got his practical knowledge from. He lived a very unworldly life with Palaniswami, yet somehow he amassed a vast repertoire of practical skills and worldly knowledge. I never met anyone who taught Bhagavan any of these things. He just seemed, quite naturally, to know them.'

The Power of the Presence

methods of serving, the Guru, he concluded by saying that if one practised them faithfully one could realise Brahman without the aid of any other spiritual practice. I served Sri Bhagavan according to these instructions and even now I have the good fortune of meditating on Guru swarupa.

One of the earliest people to recognise Sri Bhagavan's greatness, and to inform others of it, was Achyutadasa, a famous poet and scholar. When Sri Bhagavan was staying in Gurumurtam in the 1890s, a holy man with a bright face came with his disciples for Sri Bhagavan's darshan. After performing bhajans for some time, he sat near Sri Bhagavan, caught hold of his feet and hands and immediately went into a state of ecstasy.

When his disciples also approached Sri Bhagavan to catch hold of his feet, Achyutadasa stopped them saying, 'This is a huge fire. None of you can get close to it.'

Achyutadasa.

He then sang some excellent vedantic songs. As Sri Bhagavan was still remaining in silence at that time, he merely witnessed that scene without commenting on it. Finally, the visitor bowed to Sri Bhagavan and left most unwillingly. Only after a few days was it learned that the visitor was Achyutadasa, a famous person who had composed many vedantic songs in Tamil. He later sent a book of his vedantic songs for Sri Bhagavan's perusal.

In the years Sri Bhagavan lived at Virupaksha Cave, he wandered freely all over the mountain. He was to say in later years that there was no part of it that he had not fully explored. On one occasion he even managed to see inside the hill and explore some of its internal mysteries. This strange experience happened on a day when he was sitting in Virupaksha Cave. Without any prior warning or preparation he suddenly found himself entering a state that he said was neither waking nor dreaming. In that new state he found himself entering a cave that was located on Arunachala. Inside the mountain he discovered many pleasant parks, beautiful lakes, and plants and trees covered with flowers and fruit. It was a most wonderful sight. Somehow, the place did not appear new to him. He felt as if he had been there before. At a later date, when Adi-annamalai Temple on the north-west side of Arunachala was being renovated, some people noticed, on the eastern side of the temple, a tunnel leading into the hill. Sri Bhagavan was informed of this discovery and when he went for pradakshina the next day he had a look at the tunnel. He noticed that it was similar to the cave he had seen in his vision, but at the time he told no one that it was familiar to him.

When the people in the temple asked him what they should do about it, Sri Bhagavan replied, 'It is not proper for us to examine it. You must close it up.'

The tunnel was closed according to his instructions. Sometime later he was surprised to discover a verse in Arunachala Mahatmyam that seemed to describe the vision he had had. He translated the Sanskrit verse into Tamil and this version can now be found in his Collected Works.<sup>14</sup> On one of his walks on the mountain Sri Bhagavan attempted to visit a banyan tree in a remote part of the northern slope of Arunachala. The story of what happened is well known but I shall tell it again because it indirectly led, many years later, to an extremely uncomfortable and embarrassing incident in my life.

Sri Bhagavan was once walking on the northern slope of Arunachala by himself. As he was crossing the third of three streams that are there, he noticed a large banyan-tree leaf in the [Siva said:] "Though I was [originally] in the form of fire, I now remain here as a hill of subdued light in order to protect the world. Moreover, I always abide here as a siddha [Arunagiri Yogi]. Know that within me shine caves, surging with many enjoyments'.

---

<sup>14</sup> Bhagavan's own account of this episode, differing in a few respects from Kunju Swami's, can be found in Letters from Sri Ramanasramam (15.1.49). The Sanskrit verse is printed there, along with a loose translation. The following is a more literal rendering of Bhagavan's Tamil version:

The Power of the Presence

stream bed. He picked it up and was surprised to discover that it was as large as a leaf from a teak tree. He looked around to find out where it had come from and saw high up on the mountain a large platform-like rock with a well-spread-out banyan tree near it.<sup>15</sup> Thinking that this must be the banyan tree mentioned in the Arunachala Mahatmyam, he started climbing slowly with the intention of going to see it. As he was climbing up the rough path, slowly and with some difficulty, his left thigh happened to touch a hornets' nest in a bush. Immediately, a swarm of large mountain hornets came out of the nest and stung his left thigh.

Sri Bhagavan stood there patiently, thinking, 'For the misdeed

The north side of Arunachala with the three streams Bhagavan mentioned flowing down its slope.

I have committed, I must receive an appropriate punishment'.<sup>16</sup> His thigh became red and swollen. Even though he was in great pain, <sup>15</sup> According to the Arunachala Mahatmyam, Siva is reputed to sit permanently under a banyan tree on the north slope of Arunachala in the form of a siddha called Arunagiri Yogi.

<sup>16</sup> The 'misdeed' was disturbing the hornets' home.

Sri Bhagavan did not fail to notice and wonder that the hornets gave vent to their fury by stinging only that part of the body that brushed against their nest. As the pain and swelling increased, he forgot all about climbing the hill to see the big banyan tree. Instead, he turned aside and limped slowly and painfully back to Virupaksha Cave.

Palaniswami, who had been looking after Sri Bhagavan with great care and attention, was shocked to see the swollen thigh. He rubbed sesame oil on the affected area and removed the hornet stings gently with a pair of tweezers. The swelling and the pain subsided very slowly. Years later, when Muruganar heard about this incident from Sri Bhagavan, he wrote a question in the form of a verse to which Sri Bhagavan replied with another verse. Here is Muruganar's verse:

O Venkata [Sri Bhagavan], when you touched what you thought to be a widely spread, green leafy bush, many hornets stung that very leg, causing it to swell. How is it that you felt repentant as if you had deliberately done that wrong which happened accidentally?

Sri Bhagavan's answering verse was:

After the leg was placed in such a position that their nest, spread in the midst of a green leafy bush, was disturbed, the hornets stung in a way that made it become swollen. Though it was a wrong that happened accidentally, what would be the nature of one's mind if one did not even repent [of that accidental misdeed]?

In later years Sri Bhagavan narrated this incident several times. Many of us wanted to go to see this famous tree ourselves and years later we got an opportunity to do so. In order to give a little background to the story I should explain that up till 1926, on the evening of Sri Bhagavan's Jayanti day, everyone in the ashram went on pradakshina with him. In the years that followed the custom of going for pradakshina was still followed, but Sri Bhagavan no longer joined us. One year, when we all felt disinclined to go round the hill without Sri Bhagavan, we decided instead to go to the top of the hill on the morning after Jayanti.

The Power of the Presence

At 5 a.m. on the day of our climb we engaged four coolies and asked them to carry some of our food up to Seven Springs, which is about two thirds of the way to the summit. Before departing, we all prostrated to Sri Bhagavan and got his permission to leave. There were about forty people in our party including S. S. Cohen, Mrs Talyarkan and some devotees who lived in the Bose compound. We walked to Guhai Namasivaya Temple and then split into two groups. The larger group took the normal path to Seven Springs, but seven of us – Munagala Venkataramiah, Kalyana Sundaram Iyer of the Book Depot, an Englishman called Thomson, his friend, who was the son of a zamindar, his caretaker, Muruganar and myself – told the others that we had decided to climb the hill via Pachaiamman Temple. Our group had secretly decided beforehand that we would first go to see the banyan tree, near which Sri Bhagavan had had his encounter with the hornets, and from there join the others at the top of the hill. Using the springs mentioned by Sri Bhagavan to guide us, we started climbing the hill at 6 a.m. By noon we had crossed the three springs and reached a very steep place from which we could see neither the top nor the bottom of the hill. By that time we were totally lost and very bewildered. Muruganar then went missing. We recovered ourselves sufficiently to look for him and found him lying in a bush. When we called out to him he responded by crawling on all fours like a baby.

We asked him, 'Why are you crawling like that?' and he answered, 'How should I walk then?' He was clearly exhausted.

The rest of us seemed to be in an equally bad condition. Venkataramaiah was lying down breathless. Kalyana Sundaram

S. S. Cohen, taken in the 1930s.

Iyer lost the power of speech. Thomson sat still, looking stunned, while his friend and servant were so afraid they began to cry. I, who was responsible for this state of affairs since I had organised this secret expedition, had no idea what to do. I just stood still.

‘I am finished,’ I thought. ‘My end has come but I am not even able to see Sri Bhagavan’s face.’

Overwhelmed by sorrow at this prospect I too began to cry. I felt that even if I survived, if I lost any of those who were with me, how could I then go and show my face to Sri Bhagavan? In the event that such a thing happened I decided that there was no alternative for me except suicide. When the thought that I would never be able to see my Bhagavan again became the dominant one in my mind, my whole body shook and I became unaware of my surroundings. Up till then I had never thought of praying to get any of my desires fulfilled. However, in the circumstances, I felt overpowered.

I prayed with all my heart: ‘O Bhagavan! Please forgive me and save us from the misfortune of having to die without getting your darshan.’

As I prayed in this way I suddenly became aware that a person was cutting wood in the distance. I immediately shouted and called to him. Fearing that we were from the forest department, he at first refused to come.

Then I waved my ochre cloth and shouted, ‘We are from Sri Ramanasramam! We will give you whatever you want! Don’t be afraid!’

He came over to us, noticed our miserable state and asked, ‘Why have you come here? From here you cannot go to the top of the hill. Where do you want to go?’

When we told him that we wanted to go to Seven Springs, he took each one of us by the hand, carefully brought us back together again and showed us the way. A small cloud came and, like Sri Bhagavan’s compassion, it bathed us with a shower. We felt refreshed and reached Seven Springs safely.

The others who had started with us had already gone to the mountain top earlier that morning. Descending, they had reached Seven Springs and eaten their food. They were sitting there, waiting for us to appear. Noticing our torn clothes along with the burned-grass stains and the scratches on our bodies, they of course enquired what had happened to us. As we told our story they jeered at us for unsuccessfully and painfully attempting to see the famous banyan tree without their knowledge.

The Power of the Presence

We sat and ate our food. It was only then that we realised that we had been so stunned by our adventure, we had not even thought of refreshing ourselves by eating the food that we had brought with us.

We stayed at Seven Springs for a while and then came down to Virupaksha Cave. The seven of us thought, 'How can we appear in this state before Sri Bhagavan? What can we say to him?' We were all afraid of facing him for we had not informed him in advance of our plan to find the tree. We had merely told him that we were going to the top of the hill. We sent Thomson and his group to their house in town. Mrs Talyarkan, Mr Cohen and some members of their group also decided to go directly back to their respective homes. That left four of us from the party that had attempted to find the tree. We decided to remain at Virupaksha Cave till it went dark, return to Palakottu, have a bath there and then go to the ashram for Sri Bhagavan's darshan.

In the meantime, Thomson and his two associates felt that since Sri Bhagavan had saved them in a time of grave danger, they should go home only after having his darshan. They hired a horse carriage, went to the ashram and prostrated to Sri Bhagavan from outside the hall without, they thought, being seen by him. Then they left. Munagala Venkataramaiah also decided to follow the same course of action. I, who was not aware of these happenings, had my bath in Palakottu, leisurely reached the ashram at 7 o'clock and prostrated to Sri Bhagavan.

When I got up Sri Bhagavan asked, 'You are standing here after doing what mischief?'

I was completely shaken by his question.

He continued, 'That zamindar boy came with burned-grass stains all over him. He prostrated outside the hall and then ran away. Venkataramaiah, who arrived in an even worse state, also prostrated outside and then went away. And you, you are appearing before me in all innocence only now. What mischief have you done?’

Kunju Swami (standing on the left) with Bhagavan.

Immediately I narrated everything that had happened and added, ‘Fearing that Sri Bhagavan would not have permitted us to go there if we had told you in advance of our plans, we thought of telling you only after visiting that place. We have been taught a proper lesson for going without telling you. Please forgive us.’

I prostrated again.

Sri Bhagavan said, ‘If you had told me of your plans at the outset, I would have asked you not to go there. ‘Sari, sari [All right, all right]’.

We took Sri Bhagavan’s ‘Sari, sari’ as an indication that he had forgiven us and felt relieved.

Life at Skandashram

There was a black rock situated further up the hill from Virupaksha Cave. One day, when Sri Bhagavan was still living in Virupaksha Cave, he went up there and found a moist area beneath this rock. He poked the spot with his walking stick and soon afterwards a small quantity of water oozed out. He told Jada Swami, who had accompanied him, that there might be a spring beneath the rock. In order to verify Sri Bhagavan’s surmise as soon as possible, Jada Swami fetched some people and began to excavate there with a crowbar. A spring of clear water was soon discovered and a small pit was dug below it. Subsequently, whenever Sri Bhagavan happened to go to that place, he would bring water from there in his kamandalu and use it at Virupaksha Cave. This newly found spring did not dry up even during the summer months.

The Power of the Presence

This very murky picture is the only known photo of Kandaswami. He is in the centre, next to Bhagavan who is sitting on the right. The photo was taken near Virupaksha Cave around 1914.

This spring eventually became the water source for Skandashram. The development of that ashram began with the arrival of Kandaswami, a devotee from Kongunadu, now located in Coimbatore District. He was one of the devotees who regularly visited Sri Bhagavan in Virupaksha Cave. In those days there was no water facility near the cave, nor was there enough room for cooking or for seating the many devotees who came to Sri Bhagavan. With the idea of overcoming these drawbacks, Kandaswami removed the stones and the thorny shrubs that surrounded the black-rock spring. He levelled the surrounding area and prepared a plot of land that was big enough to accommodate a large building. Next, he raised a wall of granite on its eastern slope as a containing wall for a flat, level terrace. He filled up the space behind the wall and on the resultant plot he planted coconut, mango and jack fruit trees. He also raised a flower garden there. Then, with great effort and with the help of Perumal Swami, he first built the present brick building and then persuaded Sri Bhagavan to come and live in it.<sup>17</sup>

---

<sup>17</sup> In Sivaprakasam Pillai's account of the construction of Skandashram (The Power of the Presence, part one) it is reported that Kandaswami left

After staying there with Sri Bhagavan for some time, Kandaswami went back to his home town. Surprisingly, he never came back to Tiruvannamalai and no one ever heard from him again. Since Kandaswami had played the major part in the development of the now famous Skandashram, in memory of his unparalleled effort, Sri Bhagavan named it after him.

Sri Bhagavan moved into Skandashram in 1915. Initially, Palaniswami also came and stayed with him. However, after a few months he informed Sri Bhagavan that because he was feeling weak and infirm, he would prefer to stay in Virupaksha Cave. From then on, each day when Sri Bhagavan took his daily stroll in the evening, he would visit Palaniswami in Virupaksha Cave and stay with him there for some time. In the weeks that followed Palaniswami got weaker and weaker.

One evening, when Sri Bhagavan had come as usual to see Palaniswami, he noticed that his condition was very serious. Sri Bhagavan sat down beside him. After a few minutes, when Palaniswami started to breathe heavily, Sri Bhagavan placed Palaniswami's head on his own lap. Shortly thereafter Palaniswami, that person of great merit, breathed his last. What great austerities he must have performed to have received this great good fortune! It was given to three beings to leave this world with their heads placed on Sri Bhagavan's lap. The first of these fortunate few was Palaniswami. The second one was Sri Bhagavan's mother, and the third one was the cow Lakshmi.<sup>18</sup>

---

Tiruvannamalai even before Bhagavan moved to Skandashram. Though Kandaswami did terrace the hillside and plant many trees there, it seems that the main buildings were built after he left and were paid for by donations from other devotees.

<sup>18</sup> 'Dying in Bhagavan's lap' may be a metaphorical way of saying that all three of them received a major transmission of Bhagavan's grace as they were nearing their death. Lakshmi the cow did not physically die in Bhagavan's lap. In fact, he was not even present at her death. See Letters from Sri Ramanasramam (20.7.48) for full details of Lakshmi's death. Valli the deer, who is buried alongside Lakshmi, did, however, die in Bhagavan's lap. There are differing accounts of how the other two animals that are buried alongside Lakshmi died, but most versions agree that the crow died in Bhagavan's hands.

The Power of the Presence

After Sri Bhagavan moved to Skandashram, a devotee called K. R. Venkatasubramania Iyer came from Calcutta. He was a prosperous man who wanted to be of service to the ashram. He consulted Gambiram Seshayyar, who was then responsible for running the ashram's affairs. Seshayyar mentioned that the ashram was already receiving a few cash donations in addition to the food supplied by Echammal, Mudaliar Patti, Kannammal and a few other devotees. Gambiram Seshayyar told Venkatasubramania Iyer that if the ashram could be sure of receiving an additional Rs 40 per month, it would pay for all their food expenses and eliminate the need of going for bhiksha. Venkatasubramania Iyer agreed to send Rs 60 every month and gave the first installment on the spot. From then onwards, Gambiram Seshayyar, who lived in town, daily sent to Skandashram one day's supply of provisions such as rice, dhal and oil in a box that came to be known as 'the post box'. In those days, all the provisions and foodstuffs received during the day would be used immediately. Nothing would be retained for use the next day. It was for this reason that Gambiram Seshayyar only ever sent one day's supply of food.

At Skandashram Sri Bhagavan's mother would get up at 4 a.m. and start reciting devotional hymns. The rest of us would all meditate except for Sri Bhagavan who, after waking at about 3 a.m., would lie half-reclining on his bed. This was the same position he slept in at night. None of us ever saw Sri Bhagavan lying on his bed fully stretched out on his back or his side. Nor did we ever see him with a pillow under his head. He never used to lie down and sleep in a bed like other people. Instead, he would Kunju Swami does not make it clear in this version that the three devotees he mentions (Palaniswami, his mother and Lakshmi the cow) all had the good fortune of having Bhagavan put his hand on their heart-centres shortly before their deaths. Bhagavan used this technique very sparingly, apparently in an attempt to bring about the realisation of certain devotees in their dying moments. He was successful in the cases of his mother and Lakshmi, but unsuccessful in the other cases. See Living By The Words of Bhagavan, pp. 79-80 for two other instances of Bhagavan using this technique.

---

Bhagavan reclining in the Skandashram courtyard.

sleep sitting down, in a semi-reclining position, with a few pillows supporting his back. Sometimes he would support his head with his hand while he was sleeping.

At 5 o'clock Sri Bhagavan would go out for about half an hour. During that time we would start reciting Aksharamanamalai and complete it by 6 o'clock. Sri Bhagavan, who had returned by then, would go out for his morning bath. We would also bathe at around the same time.

The frugal way in which Sri Bhagavan used oil, soap and water during his morning bath astonished us all. Although he could have had anything he wanted merely by asking, by remaining without possessions Sri Bhagavan taught us the virtue of frugality. His morning bath routine exemplified this in every way.

Both Sri Bhagavan and the devotees cleaned their teeth with tooth powder that was prepared in the ashram. It was kept in small, folded paper packets, with each packet containing a day's requirement for one person. If on any particular day Sri Bhagavan found the tooth powder in his packet to be in excess, he would rewrap it in the same paper and give it back to us. We were expected to keep it carefully and return it to him for his use on the following morning. If we failed to give it to him, he would reprimand us for our carelessness and our lack of thriftiness.

Both at Skandashram and for a few years at Sri Ramanasramam Sri Bhagavan used panchakalpam [a herbal concoction made from five different ingredients] for his bath. Later on we used to extract the milky juice from ripe coconut kernels and make an oil by boiling it. We would then add pepper and tumbai flowers and decant the mixture into bottles. Sri Bhagavan used this oil, which was very fragrant and clear, each day when he had a bath. He would take a little of the oil on his palm and rub it on his head while we were getting the hot water ready in the bathroom. Sri Bhagavan would then put a little hot water on his head, mix it with the oil he had put there and apply the resultant oily liquid to his body. Because he did this several times during his bath, the little oil he took at the beginning would be sufficient to cover his entire body. After he had oiled himself in this way, he would pour small quantities of hot water over his body, put a little bath soap in his hand and rub it over his body. In bathing this way he got the maximum benefit from the minimum of materials.

The Power of the Presence

On the eastern side of Skandashram, at the place where the parapet wall is now located, there used to be a large stone slab. We used to place tooth powder and water there so that Sri Bhagavan could clean his teeth after the completion of the recitation of Aksharamanamalai. Even on very misty and cold mornings Sri Bhagavan insisted on brushing his teeth only on that particular stone. At that early hour Sri Bhagavan's body shone like gold in the morning sunlight. On very cold mornings devotees used to request him not to sit outside while he brushed his teeth, but Sri Bhagavan ignored their repeated requests. It was only later that we came to know the reason why.

An old woman, Sowbhagyattamma, was living on Big Street, which borders the northern side of the Arunachaleswara Temple. She and some other elderly people had decided that they would only eat their morning food each day after they had had darshan of Bhagavan at Skandashram. If any of the regular visitors failed to come for darshan, Sri Bhagavan would always notice and make enquiries about their health. So, when Sowbhagyattamma failed to come one morning, he waited until she came the next day and asked her why she had missed a day.

She answered, 'But I had Sri Bhagavan's darshan yesterday'.

Bhagavan sitting on the parapet wall in front of Skandashram.

Sri Bhagavan was surprised. 'But you did not come yesterday'.

Then she told him her story. 'Realising my infirmity, you gave me the good fortune of having your darshan from near my house itself’.

The Power of the Presence

She went on to explain that she could see Sri Bhagavan while he was sitting on the stone, brushing his teeth. She added that as she was not able to climb the hill every day she would henceforth have his darshan by looking at him from her own house. From that day onwards, even when the weather was bad, Sri Bhagavan always used to brush his teeth sitting on that stone. This proved convenient to many other elderly devotees who wanted to have his darshan but were unable to climb the hill.

At 8 a.m. each morning, when we had all completed our various personal and domestic chores, we would all sit outside with Sri Bhagavan and eat our breakfast. A devotee called Sama Iyer used to get up at 4 a.m. to prepare our breakfast, which in those days usually consisted of dhal-rasam and rice. The food would usually be served by Sama Iyer and Ramanatha Brahmachari.

Sama Iyer (left) with Bhagavan at Ramanasramam.

After breakfast Sri Bhagavan would sit on his seat on the veranda. Some devotees would meditate near him while others would read books such as Ribhu Gita. In this peaceful atmosphere Sri Bhagavan would sometimes clear away the doubts of devotees.

During the day Sri Bhagavan would receive visiting devotees or do odd jobs in and around the ashram. Sometimes he would just sit still, in silence, absorbed in the Self. In the late afternoon he would get up and invariably go for a walk on the hill.

At about 6.30 each evening we would sit before Sri Bhagavan and chant Aksharamanamalai again. While we chanted Sri Bhagavan would recline on a pillow with his eyes closed. By the time the parayana<sup>19</sup> was over it would be 7.30 and time for our supper. About once every two or three days, during our parayana, Sri Bhagavan would get absorbed in samadhi. If he did not open his eyes even after the completion of the parayana, we would gently call to him. Sri Bhagavan would usually not respond because he would be totally unaware of the external world. In order to wake him up, Perumal Swami, Akhandananda, Mastan Swami and myself would each take up a conch and blow them. The sound of the conches would enter into his motionless consciousness and bring him slowly back to external consciousness. On such nights supper would only be served at 9 o'clock. Even after Sri Bhagavan moved to the Mother's samadhi he used to go into samadhi about once every seven to ten days. On such occasions Dandapani Swami would try to wake him up by firmly holding his feet and moving them, but his attempts would prove futile. It was only possible to wake him up by blowing the conches. As the years passed Sri Bhagavan went into this state less and less.

<sup>19</sup> Parayana is the chanting of a scriptural work.

During the years that Sri Bhagavan stayed at Skandashram, he frequently used to go for giri pradakshina with the devotees. There are three pradakshina paths: the innermost path goes along the foot of the hill, the middle one is through the jungle and the outermost path is the pradakshina road. During daytime we used to go either on the inner path at the foot of the hill or on the path through the jungle. Only at night time would we use the road. Sometimes we went so slowly we would take two or three days to complete the eight-mile pradakshina.

When we went for pradakshina, we would take with us sufficient food to last for a day. If devotees from town came to know that Sri Bhagavan had started on a pradakshina, a man called Jayarama Iyer and some other devotees from town would come with all the necessary provisions to cook food either at Gautama Ashram or Pachaiaimman Temple. On such occasions we used to camp for two or three days on the way. While going for pradakshina during the wintry nights of January and February we would collect dry leaves and twigs, make a fire and warm ourselves. I, along with a few other devotees, used to walk ahead to make the fire. When Sri Bhagavan and the rest of devotees arrived they would warm themselves for a while before resuming their walk. By the time they reached the next resting place, we would already have made a fire there.

The Power of the Presence

Seeing our activities Sri Bhagavan once quoted a very apt Tamil proverb: “‘They have time to gather the dry leaves and twigs, but have no time for warming themselves.’ This fits these people very well.’ And then he laughed.

Such remarks from Sri Bhagavan always elevated our spirits and made us feel very good.

Sri Ramanasramam

About two years after I came to Sri Bhagavan his mother became bedridden on account of repeated attacks of diarrhoea. Since she was unable to do any of her usual chores, her saris were cleaned and washed by Niranjanananda Swami, her son. When I saw him toiling alone, I too cleaned and washed her clothes and thus had the great good fortune of rendering service to her. Although she received treatment, her condition did not improve. Instead it steadily deteriorated. On the morning of May 19th, 1922, a day that turned out to be the last day of her life, it was clear that she was suffering greatly. She spent the day lying in the room that is located on the southern side of the place where Sri Bhagavan stayed.

After returning from his morning walk, Sri Bhagavan went to the room where his mother was lying, sat by her side and stayed there throughout the day. When evening came, she was panting for breath. Sri Bhagavan, seeing the intensity of her suffering, placed his right hand on her chest, an action that gave her a little relief. Her moment of liberation was fast approaching. Sri Bhagavan continued to sit quietly with one hand on her head and the other on her chest. The other people in the ashram, seeing her condition, felt that it would be good to finish dinner early, by 6 p.m. They put out the leaf plates and called to Sri Bhagavan to come and take his dinner. Sri Bhagavan replied that he would eat later and then asked all the others to go ahead and eat. Niranjanananda Swami and Ramakrishna Swami and I stayed with Sri Bhagavan while the rest went and had their food.

Kavyakantha Ganapati Muni was there, sitting on one side of the ashram. After the meal was over, Raju Sastry, Sundaresa Iyer, Vaidyanatha Sastry and a few others started doing a Veda parayana. Simultaneously, Saranagati Ramaswami Iyer, a Punjabi devotee, and many others were loudly chanting the name of Rama. Those of us who stayed near Sri Bhagavan recited Aksharamanamalai.

A group photo taken on the hill around 1920. Azhagammal (Bhagavan's mother) is seated between her two sons Chinnaswami (seated right) and Bhagavan.

Mother Azhagammal, the meritorious person who begot Sri Bhagavan, was absorbed into the Self at 8 p.m. that evening. Sri Bhagavan sat there in silence for some time before getting up. After he had moved, we covered her body with a new ochre sari, applied vibhuti to her forehead, garlanded her and placed her on a seat on the outer veranda.

When these preliminary ceremonies were over, Sri Bhagavan said, 'Now we can eat,' and sat under a tree to take his food.

How can there be pollution or sorrow for a perfect jnani who has renounced everything?<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> Contact with a dead body would ordinarily put one in a state of ritual

The Power of the Presence

Those of us who had remained with Sri Bhagavan also sat down to eat. Afterwards we discussed the construction of a samadhi for Sri Bhagavan's mother. As the hill was revered as a lingam, it would not have been proper to perform the cremation or the burial on the hill. Furthermore, since it would have been difficult for devotees to come all the way up the hill, it was decided to take the body to the foot of the hill at 5 a.m. the next day. Nayana and some of the others then went down the hill after first arranging to be at Pali Tirtham by 5 a.m. During the night Perumal Swami, Ramakrishna Swami and a few others went down to the town to collect the necessary materials – cement, stone slabs etc. – for the construction of the samadhi.

During the night Sri Bhagavan sat near the place where we had put the Mother's body. Brahmachari Arunachala Swami and I sat with him. Brahmachari Arunachala Swami had originally been a cook in the big temple in town before he renounced the world and became a devotee of Sri Bhagavan. Sri Bhagavan then announced that the Tiruvachakam<sup>21</sup> should be chanted. Sri Bhagavan and the devotees took it in turn to read from the book. While we were reading Sri Bhagavan corrected all the mistakes in our rendering as and when we made them. In this way we went through the entire Tiruvachakam before 4 a.m. By then the people who had gone to collect the materials for the samadhi construction had come back. The bamboo poles that would be necessary for carrying the Mother's body had been obtained serendipitously about four days before. Ramaswami Pillai and I had gone to the top of the hill. Someone who had cut and taken bamboo from there had in the process left a few large pieces, so we brought them down, but with no particular purpose in mind. Now these bamboo poles came in handy.

Sri Bhagavan's sister, Alamelu Amma, who had been sent a pollution in which one would not be able to eat. At the very least one should take a bath, but Bhagavan ignored these two fundamental social rules.

---

<sup>21</sup> A 9th century collection of devotional poetry, all of it in praise of Siva, composed by the Tamil saint Manikkavachagar.

Seated right: Chinna Swami. Standing right: Kunju Swami. Standing second right: Ramaswami Pillai. Standing second left: Ramanatha Brahmachari.

telegram when mother's condition had deteriorated, was expected at Skandashram. In order to bring her and any other devotees who might come down to Pali Tirtham and to receive from town the 'post box', the name we gave to the container in which our provisions were stored, it was felt that someone should stay behind at Skandashram. It was decided that I should be the one to stay. Sri Bhagavan and the others went down to Pali Tirtham with Perumal Swami and Ramakrishna Swami, who were carrying the Mother's body. Although I was afraid of staying at Skandashram alone in such circumstances, I remained at my post. I received the post box there and came down to join the others by 7 a.m. Mother had been put in a sitting position on the platform under the large peepul tree on the banks of Pali Tirtham. Sri Bhagavan and the others were sitting nearby. An area around the samadhi sufficient to seat about 100 people had been cleared. It had originally been covered with cacti. Alamelu Amma, her husband Pitchu Iyer and many other devotees had come. A large crowd had also come from the town. As the news of her samadhi had spread in the town during the night devotees had arrived, bringing with them mounds of flowers, fruits, coconuts etc. On one side a nadaswaram musician<sup>22</sup> was performing, while on the other side bhajans were being sung. Construction of the samadhi was going on, following the rules given in Tirumantiram, an ancient Tamil work by Tirumular.<sup>23</sup> An abbishekam [a consecration ceremony in which liquid is poured over a representation or symbol of a deity] was done with milk, curd and coconut water that had been brought by devotees. It was completed at 10 a.m. after which the body was taken to the samadhi spot. Kusa grass and vibhuti were spread in the samadhi pit, in accordance with tradition, before Mother's body was lowered into it. Sri Bhagavan was then given some vibhuti and camphor. After he had thrown these into the samadhi pit, we too threw a handful of each into the hole. The pit was filled with camphor, bilva leaves, vibhuti and brick powder and finally closed with a stone slab. A lingam was placed on top, naivedya [consecrated food] offered and a light of burning camphor waved before it.

The Power of the Presence

By now it was twelve noon. We all started for Palakottu. Sri Bhagavan started walking slowly in that direction and the nadaswaram player, with the intention of making the best use of this rare opportunity, played superbly, facing Sri Bhagavan all the time and walking backwards. It took more than an hour to reach Palakottu, a distance of around a hundred yards. It was a rare sight to see on the one hand the nadaswaram player giving such a superb performance, all the time facing Sri Bhagavan, and on the other hand the beauty of Sri Bhagavan walking slowly to fit the mood of his music. It was a unique occasion for nothing like this ever happened again. The devotees had prepared food in Palakottu and more than a hundred people were fed there. We stayed in Palakottu till evening, did deeparadhana [waving of lights] puja to the samadhi and then returned to Skandashram for the night. Nayana, Mudaliar Patti and other local people went to their respective homes.

---

<sup>22</sup> A nadaswaram is a wind instrument resembling a clarinet that is played during many South Indian Hindu rites and festivals.

<sup>23</sup> This ancient work gives detailed instructions on how the tomb of an enlightened being should be prepared. The same rules were followed when Bhagavan's body was interred in 1950.

Next day, at the suggestion of some devotees, it was decided that on the tenth day a samadhi puja should be performed and till then daily food offerings should be made. Accordingly, each day, Chinnaswami and Ramanathan, the son of Yoganatha, brought cooked rice from Skandashram, performed puja to the samadhi and returned to Skandashram for their lunch. In order to prepare for the tenth day puja Sri Bhagavan and some of the devotees, including myself, came down on the previous evening and slept in the Vinayaka Temple in Palakottu. On that particular evening Meenakshi Amma from Tiruchuzhi, Alamelu Amma and several others had prepared very tasty Tiruchuzhi dosas for us to eat.

On the next day the puja began with an abhishekam of milk and panchamritam [a sweet preparation with five separate ingredients] and continued on a grand scale with traditional worship, flower decoration etc. Kumbakonam Iyengar Swami had prepared in advance all the items needed for naivedya. Food for the visiting devotees was prepared under the supervision of Satram Narayana Iyer in a thatched shed near the Vinayaka Temple at Palakottu. More than a thousand people were fed under a pandal that had been erected under an iluppai tree. We stayed till evening, lighted the moksha deepam [the light of liberation] and returned to Skandashram with Sri Bhagavan.

Some devotees desired that on the forty-eighth day after these ceremonies had been performed, a special rite known as a mandala puja should be performed and till then daily food offerings should be made. This was agreed upon.

When the daily pujas began, cooked food from Skandashram was brought down every day and offered to the samadhi at the conclusion of the puja. Water for performing abhishekam was brought from Palakottu. One day though, after some heavy rains,

The Power of the Presence

water collected in a small pit that had been dug while the samadhi was being constructed. The soil from the hole, which was about fifty feet from the samadhi, had been used during its construction. Even after the rains stopped the water in the pit remained clear and did not dry up. On one of their visits Chinnaswami and Chinna Ramanathan baled out all the water in the hole, but clear water continued to ooze into the hole from an underground spring. They decided to use this water for abhishekam and took a sample of it back to Skandashram where they showed it to Sri Bhagavan. Sri Bhagavan came down to the samadhi site from Skandashram that evening. On seeing this spring water he had a pit a yard square and a yard deep dug on the spot. A large quantity of clear water oozed into the pit. This hole was enlarged still more until it eventually became the large well that is now located in the centre of the ashram. From then till now it has given the ashram a continuous supply of water.<sup>24</sup>

The water from this well is nowadays used for the daily abhishekam that is done to both the Mother's and Sri Bhagavan's samadhis.

The delivery of cooked food to the devotees who were staying at the samadhi was a long and tedious chore, and the return trip to Skandashram in the middle of the day, when the sun was very hot, was an unpleasant one. So, those who were staying at the samadhi in order to perform the pujas there were sent small quantities of rice and dhal. They would cook their own food there, eat it, and return to Skandashram in the evening. After some time a small thatched hut was put up near the shrine for cooking, and both Dandapani Swami and Niranjanananda Swami started staying there permanently. This separate establishment was maintained out of the supplies that were sent to Skandashram every day. Since a portion of the provisions being sent to Skandashram was diverted to the devotees at the Mother's samadhi, the residents of Skandashram did not have sufficient food for themselves, especially in the evening. Some of the devotees were unhappy with the arrangement. The murmurs of dissatisfaction soon reached the ears of Vasudeva Sastry who was then looking after the management of Skandashram. Vasudeva Sastry, who lived in town, wrote a chit to Ramanatha Brahmachari, who was staying at Skandashram.

---

<sup>24</sup> Though the supply has been 'continuous', it has never been sufficient. In the early days of Sri Ramanasramam everyone except Bhagavan had to go to the Palakottu tank every afternoon to collect two buckets of water for communal ashram use. Nowadays the ashram's water comes from additional wells, bore wells and municipal taps.

Vasudeva Sastry sitting (bottom left) on the hill with Bhagavan around 1915. Echammal is standing behind him.

It said: 'The devotees are not giving for Vasudeva [Krishna's father] they are only giving for Vaasudeva [one of the names of Krishna].'

Ramanatha Brahmachari showed the note to Sri Bhagavan who remarked, 'Oh! Did Vaasudeva appear without Vasudeva?' When Vasudeva Sastry came to hear about this remark, he decided to say no more on the matter.

There was another similar problem concerning oil that was sent to the Mother's samadhi. A photo of Sri Bhagavan, which had been taken at Pachaiaimman Temple, was kept in Skandashram near the place where he used to sit. When Mudaliar Patti brought food to Sri Bhagavan, she used to garland this picture, light camphor and prostrate before it. A devotee in the town had arranged for a supply of oil to keep an oil lamp near the picture continuously lit. Oil required for the lamps at the Mother's samadhi used to be taken from the supply intended for use at Skandashram. As a result, there was a shortage of oil at Skandashram. Ramanatha Brahmachari, who had taken on the responsibility of keeping the lamp lit, felt troubled but did not want to say anything about it.

The problem was finally resolved when Dandapani Swami and

The Power of the Presence

Niranjanananda Swami came up to Skandashram one day and said, 'Bhagavan himself is here. You do not need a picture of him. We want to have the picture at the samadhi.'

They took both the picture and the lamp to the Mother's samadhi and in this way ended the problem of the oil supply.

Sri Bhagavan occasionally used to visit the Mother's samadhi either in the morning or the evening. He kept up this routine for about five or six months.

One day during this period Chinnaswami told me, 'Come down to the samadhi this evening. We have arranged to prepare dosas tomorrow morning. You can bring some back for Sri Bhagavan and the others.'

I agreed. After asking Ramakrishna Swami to attend to Sri Bhagavan's personal needs, I went that evening to the Mother's samadhi. I got up early the next morning to wash the dishes in the stream near Palakottu.

Standing, right to left: Ramakrishna Swami, Dandapani Swami, Muruganar, Perumal Swami.

It was still twilight when I suddenly heard a voice, 'Will there be any food available for a guest?'

I looked up and was thrilled to see Sri Bhagavan standing there. He was holding a stick in his hand, had a cloth wrapped round his body and a towel tied round his head. It was a beautiful and rare darshan. Chinnaswami and Dandapani Swami overheard us talking and came out of the hut. They were both overjoyed to see Sri Bhagavan and entreated him to stay with us and have some dosa. Sri Bhagavan initially declined, but he finally agreed to their request. He brushed his teeth with a neem twig, washed his face in the stream, came back and sat inside the hut. By that time the usual supply of goat's milk had also arrived. Sri Bhagavan sat with us and had dosa and coffee.

Looking at me he said, 'It seems that one by one people are coming and collecting here because they get such nice food'. And then he laughed.

After we had finished breakfast Sadiappa Chettiar visited us. He lived in town and had just visited the Draupadi Amman Temple of which he was a trustee. When he learned that Sri Bhagavan had come down from Skandashram, he immediately went home, loaded into a cart all the provisions necessary for a day's cooking and came with it to the Mother's samadhi. He told Sri Bhagavan that his elderly sister was unable to climb the hill, adding that she was feeling unhappy because she could not have his darshan. He begged Sri Bhagavan to accept a bhiksha [a special meal offered by a devotee] at the samadhi itself in the company of his sister and some other people who would soon arrive. Sri Bhagavan felt unable to refuse, so he accepted the request. Sometime later when Ramakrishna Swami, who was Sri Bhagavan's attendant at the time, discovered that Sri Bhagavan had not returned to Skandashram, he came down the hill with some clothes for Sri Bhagavan. Other devotees from Skandashram followed him and the bhiksha that day was a great success. The news that Sri Bhagavan had come down the hill and had a bhiksha soon spread in the town. Nayana,

The Power of the Presence

Bhagavan and Ganapati Muni

who usually came to see Sri Bhagavan at Skandashram, came to the samadhi along with many other devotees. The festivities lasted all day. When night came Sri Bhagavan and his devotees decided to sleep near the Mother's samadhi because it was too dark to return to Skandashram. Early the next morning another devotee unexpectedly arrived with provisions and offered another bhiksha to Sri Bhagavan, so Sri Bhagavan was forced to spend yet another day at the samadhi. On each of the succeeding days devotees arranged bhikshas at the samadhi. Sri Bhagavan continued to stay there because he could not say 'no' to any of their loving entreaties.

As we had left many of our things lying around in Skandashram, it was felt that it would be good if someone went back and stayed there. No one volunteered because everyone was afraid of staying there alone. It was eventually decided to send two devotees. Gopal Rao and I were selected for the job, so both of us went back to Skandashram and stayed there. We waited there for a week and were fed on food that was sent up to us from the samadhi.

When Sri Bhagavan had not come back by the end of that week we said to each other, 'Have we come to be watchmen without even being in the presence of Sri Bhagavan?'

With these thoughts uppermost in our minds, we both came down the hill.

Chinnaswami saw us coming and asked, 'Why have you returned?'

We replied, 'We could not keep away from Sri Bhagavan any longer'.

No one complained at our behaviour.

Because of the bhikshas he was receiving, Sri Bhagavan began to stay permanently at the samadhi. A few days later some devotees who went to Skandashram came back and reported that all the doors were open and that all our things had been stolen. We went back immediately and found that a long wooden plank used by Sri Bhagavan, a clock and a few other items had been stolen. We brought the remaining items down to the samadhi.

Bhagavan reading a letter in front of the first building that was erected over his mother's samadhi in 1922.

The same building recorded on the same day by the same photographer from a vantage point closer to Arunachala.

Pandava Tirtham and its adjoining temple

This photo was taken by the same photographer who took the two pictures of the first hut that was erected over the Mother's Samadhi. And it was taken on the same visit. This makes it likely that the photo is of Bhagavan floating, probably in Pandava Tirtham, which is adjacent to Ramanasramam.

Sri Bhagavan remarked, 'It is good. From now on, no one needs to go there to watch.'

Although he gave other reasons as a pretext, Sri Bhagavan made the Sri Mathrubhuteswara Temple [the official name of the Mother's samadhi] his permanent place of residence in order to help elderly devotees like Sadiappa Chettiar's sister who could not climb the hill. By moving, he blessed them with peace of mind. Who can really describe this compassionate act of his?

During the initial days of our stay at the Mother's samadhi we used to get up at 4 a.m., complete our morning ablutions and then go with Sri Bhagavan to the Pandava Tirtham at the foot of the hill. Iswara Swami and some other devotees who lived in the corner mantapam of the big temple learned about Sri Bhagavan's visits to the tank and joined us there every day. Sri Bhagavan, Iswara Swami and Sama Iyer would lie flat on the water in the padmasana posture. The rest of us tried to imitate them.

In those days it used to get very cold at night, and buildings and sleeping materials were minimal. Sri Bhagavan was given a sheet and a pillow and slept on top of a low platform. The rest of us had to make do with mats made of woven coconut leaves that we placed on top of bricks. The devotees used to sleep near Sri Bhagavan's platform because a smouldering charcoal stove would be kept there at night. If there was a shortage of charcoal, we would collect large quantities of tamarind bark to keep the fire going.

Because Sri Bhagavan never slept much, even during the night, we all used to sit around the smouldering charcoal stove with him. At those tranquil periods pearls of wisdom used to fall from his lips. It was a golden period that can never be experienced again. If devotees came from outside, we would give them our sleeping places and go to sleep either in the mantapam opposite the samadhi or in the Draupadi Amman Temple in the forest. We would return to the ashram in the morning. In summer, when it was warmer, we used to sleep on the ground under peepul trees.

On some days there would be no food to eat but the very next day there would be an abundance. Irrespective of whether we were hungry or satiated, Sri Bhagavan maintained perfect equanimity.

The Power of the Presence

Draupadi Amman Temple, a five minute walk from Ramanasramam on the south side of Arunachala.

He encouraged us to have the same attitude by saying,

‘Whenever we do not get food, we should celebrate that day as Ekadasi, and when we get plenty of food, that day as Dwadasi’.<sup>25</sup>

Whenever there was a shortage of rice we used to go to the forest and collect a variety of green leaves. While we were cleaning them prior to cooking, Sri Bhagavan would explain the characteristics and medicinal properties of each one of them – for example, how one produced cold in the body while another produced heat. We used to fill a large vessel of cleaned greens and cook them in whatever way Sri Bhagavan suggested. At eating time Sri Bhagavan would ask us to have the dish of greens as the main dish and rice as the side dish. These meals, tasting like nectar, would fill us up completely. It is not known how Sri Bhagavan came to acquire his knowledge of the special qualities of various leaves. He came to Arunachala as a schoolboy and immediately engaged himself in intense tapas. It is therefore amazing how Sri Bhagavan, who did not take up any other activities after coming to Arunachala, came to know cooking, the stitching of leaf plates, the making of flower garlands, the preparation of pickles and many other activities. There was seemingly nothing that Sri Bhagavan, who was perfection itself, did not know how to do. Sometimes we used to bring leaves to make leaf plates. Echammal, her sister and a few others, who knew how to stitch them properly, used to stitch along with Sri Bhagavan. Sri Bhagavan would stitch the leaves more beautifully, more neatly and more quickly than those who were very experienced in the art. The leaves he stitched always appeared beautiful and perfect.<sup>26</sup> In those days if a devotee came from another town to Tiruvannamalai, he would offer bhiksha to Sri Bhagavan. At that time five rupees was enough to feed us all. The number of people staying in the ashram was not high, and the prices of various commodities were favourable. The devotee who offered the bhiksha would generally want to go round the hill with Sri Bhagavan the same evening. Sri Bhagavan always agreed to this. All of us would start and walk very slowly, meditating and chanting on the way. By the time we had completed the pradakshina and returned to the ashram, morning would often have dawned. We never used to feel tired because we were immersed in the joy of having accompanied Sri Bhagavan around the hill. We devotees, who had walked all night, were able to take time off for a short nap in the afternoon, but Sri Bhagavan could never get any rest during the day because devotees would be continuously coming to see him. Usually, each afternoon another devotee would come, offer a bhiksha and ask that Sri Bhagavan accompany him around the hill that night. Sri Bhagavan, would agree even if he had had no sleep the night before. He would indicate by a gesture that we should not tell the person concerned about his having gone around the hill the previous night. There were occasions when we could not sleep for two or three days because of continuous bhikshas, but for youngsters like us it was all great fun.

---

<sup>25</sup> Ekadasi is the eleventh day of the waxing or waning moon. Many Hindus fast on that day. Dwadasi, the twelfth day, is when the fast is broken with sumptuous eating.

When he was asked how the lack of sleep for three successive nights affected him, he replied, 'What is sleep? It means resting

---

<sup>26</sup> Leaf plates are about a foot in diameter and are made of dried tree leaves, stapled together with short lengths of a tough dried grass. They are thrown away after one meal has been eaten off them.

Jatini Sundarambal, the second woman on Bhagavan's left.

the mind. But it is only if you have a mind that you need to rest it. However, to be awake all night will naturally bring eye strain and eye ache. But if you close the eyes and remain quiet for some time, the eye strain will go. That is all that is needed. So, where is the problem?’

One woman who took advantage of Sri Bhagavan’s willingness to go round the hill after a bhiksha was Sundarambal, a local sadhu. Since she was a remarkable woman, I will tell her story in some detail.

She was tall and majestic, the daughter of a lawyer from Tiruvallur, which is near Madras. Sadhus often came to her house and even as a child she welcomed them. Once, a wandering monk, inspired by her devotion, taught her how to meditate on the spot between the eyebrows. She practised with great enthusiasm and could sit for a long time, lost in total contemplation. When she grew up her family married her to a man in Madras, but whenever she went to her husband's house, she would start to develop a severe headache that would not respond to any treatment. When she went back to her father's house, the headaches would stop. They would only recur when she would attempt to re-enter the house of her husband. Her husband was a very understanding man. He sympathised with her plight and allowed her to stay permanently in her father's house. It was clearly not her destiny to live a normal married life. Soon afterwards she entered a new phase of her spiritual growth when she found that the headaches occurred whenever she was not absorbed in meditation. Initially, it was only married life that gave her a headache. Now, everything in the world that was not connected with meditation brought on the same physical pain. The pain of normal consciousness and the desire for a contemplative life drove her to the point where she meditated all day.

After a few years she heard of Sri Bhagavan, came to see him, and found immediate peace and relief in his presence. Initially she stayed with Echammal, but later on she lived alone on the hill as a sadhu. As her hair became long and matted, she acquired the name 'Jatini Sundarambal'.<sup>27</sup>

Though she lived some distance from the ashram, she came every day to have Sri Bhagavan's darshan. On one occasion she fasted for twenty-one days and ended it by offering a bhiksha to Sri Bhagavan and the devotees. Afterwards, at her request, all of us, including Sri Bhagavan, went on a giri pradakshina with her. On the way

Echammal

<sup>27</sup> 'Jatini' means 'a woman with matted locks'.

The Power of the Presence

round, Sundarambal described in detail the spiritual practices she was following, the problems she faced, and sought Sri Bhagavan's guidance for furthering her sadhana. By way of an answer, Sri Bhagavan asked me to tell her the story of Queen Chudala. This is a story that appears in Yoga Vasishtha. I told it in great detail and with great enthusiasm. Many people were shy in the presence of Sri Bhagavan. They would stammer and stutter when they had to talk to him. I was never like that. I never felt uneasy if I had to speak in front of him. Like a child that displays its ability with enthusiasm and confidence when it is in front of its beloved mother, I always used to be happy and confident while reading stotras or talking about spiritual matters in front of Sri Bhagavan.

This is how I told the story:

'King Sikhidvaja and Queen Chudala ruled the kingdom of Malava. Chudala regularly practised meditation in the silent hours of the night. In due course she realised the Self, as a result of which her face shone brightly and she became much more beautiful than before. The king noticed this and asked the reason. The queen replied that it was due to her Self-realisation. The king laughed at her, thinking that realisation was possible only through severe austerities and could never be gained while living in a palace. He himself had religious inclinations and wanted to leave the kingdom to practise tapas in the forest so that he could gain Self-realisation. The queen tried to dissuade him and suggested that he could carry on the tapas in the palace itself and rule the kingdom as well. Refusing to act on her advice, he went to the forest and performed hard penance. The queen ruled the kingdom in the king's absence.

'The queen took pity on her husband. Being anxious to rescue him from the mire of delusion, she practised siddhis and took the guise of a rishi called Kumbha Muni. She then materialised before him a few feet off the ground. The king, thinking that some celestial being had descended from the heavens to bless him, fell at his feet, told him his woes and sought guidance.

'The muni gave the king the following advice: "Karmas [activities] can give fruit as ordained by the Lord, but karmas themselves cannot grant you liberation. By doing disinterested actions, one's mind can become pure. Then, with the pure mind, one should contemplate the Self. This will destroy the vasanas. Next, one should approach a Master and through his grace learn how to enquire into the nature of the Self. Liberation is possible only through enquiry and not by performing any amount of karma. By renouncing everything, one can realise the truth."

"The king said that he had renounced everything already, including his kingdom and family. Kumbha Muni told him that his renunciation was only external and that the seeds of attachment were still latent in him. The king then took his walking staff, his water pot, his rudraksha beads, his clothes, threw them all in the fire and stood naked without any possessions. On being told that he had still not renounced completely, the king was ready to drop his last possession, his body, by jumping from the top of a mountain.

"The muni asked him, "What harm has the body done to deserve this punishment?"

'By giving this answer the muni taught him that he could not realise the truth by destroying the body, but only by destroying the mind that was the source of all attachments. The mind identifies itself as "I" and this is the bondage. The snapping of this identification is the renunciation of everything. Having got this far with his instructions, the muni then described in detail the sadhana of discrimination.

'After hearing all these words the king's doubts were dispelled and his mind became pure. The king took the advice to heart, enquired into the source of self, soon became one with it and remained in blissful samadhi.

'Kumbha Muni disappeared and returned sometime later, but the king was still in samadhi. Chudala roared like a lion to wake him up, but could not bring him out of his samadhi state. So, taking a more subtle form, she entered the king's heart and found it pure and devoid of any latent tendencies. In a melodious voice she began to chant the Sama Veda. Like the blossoming of a lotus, the king suddenly became aware of the world. Filled with joy, he remained silent, finding no words to express his gratitude. Then, as advised by the queen, he returned with her to the kingdom.

The Power of the Presence

Fully established in truth, he ruled the kingdom with the queen for many years.'

Sri Bhagavan was pleased with my narration. At its conclusion he said, appreciatively, 'Not bad! He narrates in such a way that it can be understood very well.'

As for Jatini Sundarambal, she had listened to my story with rapt attention. It had a profound effect on her and she left Arunachala soon afterwards. I had no doubt that the story and Sri Bhagavan's grace fully established her in the Self. What else could happen since Sri Bhagavan chose such a powerful story to be told to her?

Sri Bhagavan always spoke highly of pradakshina and encouraged many devotees to go as often as possible. The following story shows just how highly he regarded the practice. A Tiruvannamalai sadhu used to go round the hill every day, without fail, but other than that he did not do any meditation, japa or other practice. One day he asked Sri Bhagavan for a particular book, so Sri Bhagavan asked me to get it and give it to him. Later Sri Bhagavan asked me whether I had handed over the book.

I told him that I had and then asked Sri Bhagavan, 'That sadhu is not doing anything other than pradakshina. He does not seem to know about anything else. What does he want this book for?'

Sri Bhagavan replied, 'What is there superior to pradakshina? That alone is sufficient. Even if you sit and do japa, the mind will wander, but if you do pradakshina the mind will remain one pointed even though the limbs and the body are moving. Doing japa or meditation with a one-pointed mind, while moving about, without having any thought other than the japa, is known as sanchara samadhi [absorption while moving]. That is why in the olden days pilgrimage on foot, without using any other conveyance, had so much importance.

'Giri pradakshina is unique. As there are many types of herbs on the hill, the breeze that blows over them is good for the body. Even today there are many siddhas and great souls on the hill. They too go around the hill, but we cannot see them. Because of this, when we do pradakshina we should keep to the left of the road. If we do this, we do pradakshina without causing any inconvenience to them. We also get the merit of walking round these great souls, thereby receiving their blessings. As we do pradakshina, the body becomes healthy and the mind attains the peace of the Self. Because of all these things, pradakshina is an extraordinary sadhana.'

In the course of his talk Sri Bhagavan also mentioned many other points that emphasised the greatness of pradakshina. I was extremely happy to hear from Sri Bhagavan himself about the greatness of pradakshina. From then on I felt enthusiastic about pradakshina, and the thought of going always filled me with joy.

After moving down the hill to Sri Ramanasramam, Sri Bhagavan continued to go for pradakshina for several years. On these occasions everyone would want to accompany him. This was not possible since someone had to stay behind to look after the ashram. We therefore had an arrangement whereby one or two of the cooks and one of the outdoor workers would stay behind. We instituted a rota so that those who had accompanied Sri Bhagavan on recent pradakshinas would stay back to give others a chance to go with him.

When we went for pradakshina with Sri Bhagavan on moonlit nights, we would eat snacks such as pooris before we left. We would then take some of this food with us to eat on the way. By the time we returned to the ashram, dawn would often be breaking.

In 1926 Narayana Rao was in charge of the kitchen. He was a majestic figure who had a good knowledge of English. He was also a boyhood friend of Chinnaśwami.

If Chinnaśwami ever criticized his cooking he would remember his old association with him and reply immediately and angrily, 'I am a rayar [a caste that has a reputation for producing skilled cooks]! Are you trying to teach me cooking?'

Once, when we were getting ready for pradakshina, Chinnaśwami asked Narayana Rao to stay back and look after the ashram as it was his turn.

'To this Narayana Rao replied, 'All of you stay with Sri Bhagavan all the time. I can only go with him after the kitchen work is over, so don't apply this notion of "turn" to me. I am also going for pradakshina.'

Because he insisted on going for pradakshina, there was a heated argument between him and Chinnaśwami at the end of which Narayana Rao said, 'If you make me stay here, I will leave the ashram'.

Chinnaśwami retorted, 'If you don't like it here, you can leave!'

News of this quarrel had reached Sri Bhagavan's ears. When we were all ready we told Sri Bhagavan that we could start.

He kept quiet for some time and then said, 'All of you go'.

Puzzled by his reply, we told him, 'Food has been packed and kept ready'.

Sri Bhagavan responded by saying, 'You can eat all that food when you come back from pradakshina'.

As we all stood there looking stunned, Sri Bhagavan said calmly but firmly, 'Because disputes such as "I will go with him" or "You will go with him" only arise because I go round the hill, you can all go and come back without me'.

Sri Bhagavan never went round the hill again.

In the period when Sri Bhagavan was still going round the hill, he would often feel tired and weak after he had returned from his walk. Some devotees saw this and felt that it would be good if Sri Bhagavan stopped doing pradakshina. The heartfelt desire of those devotees came to be fulfilled when Sri Bhagavan came to hear that the devotees were quarrelling among themselves over who should accompany him.

Narayana Rao felt very sad that he had been responsible for Sri Bhagavan's decision to stop going for pradakshina. He left the ashram a few months later and went to stay at Pavalakundru, but he still came for Sri Bhagavan's darshan quite frequently.

It is inevitable, I suppose, that in an ashram some people will end up quarrelling with others. It is also inevitable that outsiders will find some pretext to quarrel with the ashram. Sri Bhagavan taught us all to stay away from disputes that were none of our business, and in particular, to avoid taking an interest in matters that were solely the concern of the ashram management.

Once, for example, some awkward problems concerning the ashram management cropped up. Without being directly concerned, I was worried about them, as I felt that failure to solve them satisfactorily would impair the good name of the ashram.

One day two or three devotees went to Sri Bhagavan and put some of these problems before him. I happened to enter the hall while they were talking about them, and he immediately turned to me and asked me why I had come in at this time and why I was interesting myself in such matters. I did not grasp the meaning of the question, so Sri Bhagavan explained that a person should occupy himself only with that purpose with which he had originally come to the ashram. He asked me what my original purpose had been.

‘To receive Sri Bhagavan’s grace,’ I replied.

‘Then occupy yourself with that alone,’ he said.

After a pause he continued by asking me whether I had any interest in matters concerning the ashram management when I first arrived. I told him that I had not.

‘Then,’ he said, ‘concentrate on the original purpose of your coming here.’

* * *

Sri Bhagavan often used to say that going for bhiksha [begging for food] was good for sadhana, that it would destroy the ego and remove the I-am-the-body idea. During the early days of our stay at Sri Ramanasramam, Ramakrishna Swami wanted to live on bhiksha. After taking Sri Bhagavan’s permission, he stayed at Virupaksha Cave and went each day to town for bhiksha.

As he walked along the street, he would shout ‘Bhiksha! Bhiksha!’ Because his call was strident, like the shouts of a hawker, some of the local boys made fun of him by asking, ‘How many bhikshas for a rupee?’

Following Sri Bhagavan’s advice that he should go to a different street every day, he begged in several different streets on two or three successive days.

On the fourth day he went down a new street and shouted ‘Bhiksha! Bhiksha!’ in the usual way. A devotee called Lakshmi Amma, who lived in that street, recognised him as an ashramite and insisted on his having bhiksha in her house. She took him inside, washed his feet, put down a leaf-plate and served food on it. She then asked him to recite the Siva Puranam [the first poem of the Tiruvachakam]. As he did not know that particular work, he just sat there without saying anything. When Lakshmi Amma realised that he didn't know what to do, she herself repeated the Siva Puranam and also a song from the Periyapuranam. She waved lighted camphor before him, prostrated to him and requested him to eat. Ramakrishna Swami felt ashamed and regretted his ignorance of what appeared to be a traditional ceremony for begging sadhus. Feeling that his attempts at going for bhiksha were enough, he returned to the ashram.

Tiruvoodal Street, Tiruvannamalai, 1949. This is one of the streets that surrounds the main temple.

When Sri Bhagavan came to hear this story he laughed and said, 'What to do? If one goes for bhiksha because of poverty one will have to go grovelling and with some hesitation. But what is he [Ramakrishna Swami]? Does he not have money of his own? Does he not have enough to buy food? After all, he only went for bhiksha for the sake of following a tradition. That is why he shouted “Bhiksha!” in such a majestic and dignified manner. At the time when I went out for bhiksha, I too would go in a dignified manner, and with indifference. It is something that comes naturally to one.’

Ramakrishna Swami is on the left. Madhava Swami is in the centre.

Then he added, ‘Those who are begging sadhus should know the Siva Puranam and songs from the Periyapuranam. When one goes for bhiksha, or when one goes to eat in a math, one should recite both of these works before taking food. In North India the works are different. There, before eating, one must recite the fifteenth chapter of the Bhagavad Gita and the Siva Mahimna Stotra, but here in the South it is not necessary for everyone to know them.’

After hearing Sri Bhagavan say this, I learned the Siva Puranam, some songs from Periyapuranam, some verses from the Bhagavad Gita and a few other songs. If there was any function in any math or ashram, Sri Bhagavan would ask me to go and attend as the ashram’s representative. With a confidence born out of knowing the tradition, I would happily go.

This Lakshmi Amma, the one who gave bhiksha to Ramakrishna Swami, had great devotion to Sri Bhagavan. On auspicious days such as new-moon day, Karttikai and the first day of the Tamil month, she would have her bath early in the morning and start for pradakshina with her only son, who was then about eight years old. On the way round the hill, at about 5 a.m., she would come to the ashram.

The Power of the Presence

On seeing them both Sri Bhagavan would remark, 'Oh, is today Karttikai? Or is it the first day of the month? It is only when I see these two that I am aware of auspicious days.'

Lakshmi Amma would usually ask her son Ramachandran to recite the Dakshinamurti Stotra before Sri Bhagavan. As the boy could not, at the end of each verse, recollect the first words of the succeeding one, Sri Bhagavan would guide him by telling him the first word each time he began a new stanza. Sri Bhagavan has translated this particular work into Tamil. Specifically for the sake of the boy Ramachandran, he put together the first words of all the verses and made them into a small poem.

Though Ramakrishna Swami and I were both serving as Sri Bhagavan's personal attendant, the workload was not sufficient to engage the two of us. As we felt that it was not proper to eat food in the Guru's presence without doing any work, we decided that one of us should go for bhiksha each day and do tapas at some place away from the ashram.<sup>28</sup>

Ramakrishna Swami's brother was sending him Rs 25 every month, which in those days was a very large sum. There was a woman called Sowbhagyattamma who lived in the town and fed sadhus there. It cost her Rs 5 a month to feed each sadhu. Her whole life revolved around feeding sadhus and having Sri Bhagavan's darshan. When it was my turn to stay outside the ashram, Ramakrishna Swami used to give Rs 5 to Sowbhagyattamma and ask her to feed me. He had a similar arrangement with her when it was his turn to stay outside the ashram. Neither of us would eat any food either in the morning or at night. We only took the lunch that was supplied by this woman. The food used to be sent to Virupaksha Cave, which is where we both stayed when we lived outside the ashram.

---

<sup>28</sup> Though Kunju Swami speaks of 'going for bhiksha', he told me, during the course of a conversation I had with him, that he never went out begging himself.

Ramakrishna Swami once went to Virupaksha Cave when it was his turn to stay outside the ashram. He was planning to do tapas there. On his fourth day, while he was meditating, he had a vision of a great effulgent light. He was both thrilled and surprised. Then, when he wondered whether he could see the town of Kumbakonam in this great effulgence, Kumbakonam appeared. Having seen the town, he then wondered whether he could see the Sri Ramanasramam that had been founded there. That too became visible.

In delight he exclaimed to himself, 'Aha! Lord Arunachala has blessed me with the vision of effulgence very quickly! In addition, I can also see anything I think of.'

Thinking in this vein, and feeling very pleased with himself, he returned to Sri Ramanasramam where he repeatedly and joyfully narrated his experience to us all.

But when Sri Bhagavan was told about the vision, he remarked, 'Oho! Is this tapas? This is splendid indeed! He went for tapas. Kumbakonam appeared and the ashram there appeared. What great tapas this is! To subside at the source of the mind and abide there as the Self – this alone is tapas. Instead, he says, "I saw this, I did this". Such states are not permanent.'

Sri Bhagavan subsequently expressed similar sentiments in verse thirty of Upadesa Undiyar:

If one knows That [Self] which remains after 'I' has ceased to exist, that is excellent tapas. So said Lord Ramana, who is the Self.

In the presence of Sri Bhagavan we were always happy and blissful. To us young brahmacharis [celibate sadhus] all activities were sports. Fasting, doing tapas alone, remaining as though the body were dead, going round the hill twice or even three times a day, sleeping on the bare floor without any bedding – all these acts were our sports. An incident that took place at Skandashram illustrates the sort of antics we got up to.

After Sri Bhagavan left Skandashram and started staying at

The Power of the Presence

Sri Ramanasramam, a priest of the Arunachaleswara Temple, Vriddhachalam, stayed at Skandashram. He was a devotee of the Goddess Raja Rajeswari, and he also knew the medicinal properties of the various herbs that grew on the hill. At Skandashram he would drink the juice of one particular herb as a purgative. On the following day he would take a tumblerful of juice from another herb. He would then go and sit inside the small room and ask me to lock the room from outside. I was his confidant in such matters. After a week I would open the room, shake him and wake him up from the trance the herbs had put him into. We went through this routine several times. He showed me the particular herbs he was using, but as I was not interested in following such methods, I immediately forgot about them.

One day this priest and I decided to take a vow to remain continuously without sleep for eight days. I asked Ramakrishna Swami to attend to Sri Bhagavan's personal needs during this period because I was planning to stay at Skandashram with the priest. During the day the priest and I took nothing but tea. We passed the time by engaging ourselves in meditation and study. At about 10 p.m. we used to walk slowly down from Skandashram and would reach the ashram below at around midnight. In those days Sri Bhagavan used to come out at that time. After spending a long time in Sri Bhagavan's presence, we would return to Skandashram early in the morning. On the fifth day we found that we could not manage without sleep any longer. It is possible to go without food for any number of days, but it is impossible to avoid sleep altogether. We paid our usual visit to Sri Ramanasramam on the night of the fifth day.

Seeing our tired look, Sri Bhagavan said, 'Enough! Enough of your vows and other mischiefs. There is some aviyal [a mixture of cooked vegetables] and rice. Go and eat.'

Realising that we could not continue any more, we ate. Our vow ended that night. Once again I resumed my work as a personal attendant to Sri Bhagavan.

Some days later I started on a pilgrimage to Kovilur Math. Sri Mahadeva Swami, who was then the head of the Kovilur Math, had previously been the head of the Isanya Math at Tiruvannamalai. When he had lived in Tiruvannamalai, he used to come frequently for Sri Bhagavan's darshan. On these occasions he would speak to us all with great affection. When he had lived in Tiruvannamalai, every Deepavali day, he would send Sri Bhagavan a bottle of oil, some soapnut powder and a new loincloth. Even after leaving Tiruvannamalai he arranged through his successor, Sri Natesa Swami, that these offerings should continue. Sri Mahadeva Swami also contributed money for the construction of Skandashram. The members of his head math initially objected, saying that the money from the math could not be given for purposes unconnected with their own math.

He responded to their complaint by saying, 'We and our math are subjected to certain regulations. But Sri Bhagavan and his state are so supreme, they cannot be bound by anything. Indeed, it is our good fortune that we are able to serve such a great one. If it is not proper to give money from the math, I shall give my own personal money.'

Such was his devotion to Sri Bhagavan.

After spending a few days at Kovilur Math, I returned to Sri Ramanasramam. Whenever I returned after visiting a place, Sri Bhagavan would ask me in detail about my visit.

He enquired about my trip to Kovilur Math and I told him, 'Sri Mahadeva Swami enquired about Sri Bhagavan's well-being and about the ashramites with great love. On the day of my visit Raja Sir Annamalai Chettiar also came with his associates.'

'What did Chettiar do?' asked Sri Bhagavan.

I replied, 'He tied his upper cloth round his waist and with great humility did ashtanga namaskaram [an elaborate full-length prostration] to Mahadeva Swami and received vibhuti from him.'

Then Sri Bhagavan asked, 'Did you do namaskar?'

'No,' I replied, somewhat hesitatingly.

When Sri Bhagavan asked me why not, I explained my attitude to him: 'After obtaining the good fortune of prostrating to Sri Bhagavan, how can I prostrate to anyone else?'

Sri Bhagavan looked at me and said, 'Aha! You are the one who knows Bhagavan well. You are a very wise man! Is your Bhagavan only this five-feet-long body on the sofa? Is he only inside this building and not anywhere else? One who has such ekabhakti [exclusive devotion] should not travel elsewhere. If one goes to other places, one must behave by observing the traditions of those places. Wherever and whomever one prostrates to, if one does it either meditating on the Guru or on one's chosen deity, the prostration will reach them. This is the only proper way.'

The Power of the Presence

I realised my mistake. From then on, whenever I happened to prostrate to someone, I always thought of Sri Bhagavan.

People who were devoted to other gods and gurus would often come to see Sri Bhagavan and prostrate before him. Because of their faith or because of Sri Bhagavan's power, they would often see in him an image of their own particular Master or deity. Tiruppugazh Alamelu Amma, for example, a woman from Madurai, was devoted to Lord Subramaniam alone. She would accept no one else as her Master and she had decided that no one else should appear before her as her Guru. As she was always singing the Tiruppugazh<sup>29</sup> she came to be known as 'Tiruppugazh' Alamelu Amma. She was a native of Madurai and only came to Tiruvannamalai when her father was given the job of Deputy Collector there. Her father had had Sri Bhagavan's darshan and was quite impressed, but when he invited his daughter to come on his next visit to Sri Bhagavan, she declined. That night she dreamt of Sri Bhagavan. In her dream the form of Sri Bhagavan disappeared and in its place she saw the form of Lord Subramaniam. As a result of this experience, she went to see Sri Bhagavan on the following day and sat before him. Initially she saw only the holy form of Sri Bhagavan, but as she continued to gaze at him, she saw him as Lord Subramaniam and surrendered totally to him.

After this experience she used to come for Sri Bhagavan's darshan quite frequently. On these visits she liked to sing Aksharamanamalai in front of him. When she reached verse forty-four, instead of singing in the usual way:

---

<sup>29</sup> Tiruppugazh is a collection of poems in praise of Subramaniam. They were all written about five hundred years ago by Arunagirinatha, Tiruvannamalai's most famous saint prior to the arrival of Ramana Maharshi.

Kunju Swami

O my Arunachala! You said, 'Turning back, daily see the "I" with the inner eye. It will then be known.'

She would alter the word-split a little and sing:

O my Arunachala! You said, 'Daily see with the inner eye the Kanda who returned. It will then be known.'<sup>30</sup>

Sri Bhagavan generally did not say anything good or bad about anyone, but if he happened to hear about the demise of anyone he knew, he would immediately tell those around him about the good qualities of the departed person. We were often surprised by how much he knew about the life and activities of the many people who came to see him. We would also sometimes wonder how he acquired obscure bits of information that were unknown even to us. Then, when we heard him speak, we would often be surprised to learn that the deceased had had such good qualities. We all wanted to have the good fortune of being praised by Sri Bhagavan after our deaths, but of course, only those who died during his lifetime had this privilege.

Whenever we heard that someone had died, we would make a point of going to sit before Sri Bhagavan because we were all keen to hear Sri Bhagavan compliment the departed person. Even when he talked about people who were, to the rest of us, inveterate scoundrels, he would always find something good to say about them.

There was a rich man called Kandaswami who lived in town. Although he occasionally used to come to the ashram for Sri Bhagavan's darshan, the local people detested him because of his bad behaviour. During his last days, which he spent in the mantapam opposite the ashram, he suffered from both poverty and disease. While he was lying in this mantapam, he sent word through a messenger that he would like some gruel prepared in the Malayalam way. Immediately Sri Bhagavan arranged for <sup>30</sup> The two Tamil words tirumbi ahantanai can also be split as tirumbia kandanai to give the second interpretation. Kanda is another name of Subramaniam.

---

The Power of the Presence

this gruel to be prepared and sent to him. On the following day Kandaswami's condition became serious, so serious in fact that we were speaking among ourselves, wondering which of his good qualities Sri Bhagavan would speak about when he passed away. A day later, Kandaswami died.

We immediately went and informed Sri Bhagavan and sat before him, thinking that even Sri Bhagavan would not be able to think of anything good to say about this man. What a disappointment!

Sri Bhagavan told us, 'No one could keep his body and clothes as clean as Kandaswami. He used neither oil nor soap. He would come at 8 a.m. in the morning and start washing his dhoti. Then he would hang it up to dry. By the time he had completed his bath it would be twelve noon. His hair and beard were always extremely clean.'

We hung our heads in shame. Who could equal Sri Bhagavan in seeing only the good qualities in all people?

Sri Bhagavan used to go to the kitchen at 4 a.m. to start cutting the vegetables. One or two of us would join him and help. Sometimes the amount of vegetables to be prepared used to startle us. Sri Bhagavan managed to cut much more, and more quickly, than the rest of us. One time, faced with a mountain of work, I looked up at the clock because I was impatient to finish the job. Actually, I wanted to go back to sleep and have another short nap.

Sri Bhagavan sensed my impatience and asked, 'Why are you looking at the clock?'

I tried to bluff him by saying, 'If I could only complete the work before five, I could go and meditate for an hour'.

Sri Bhagavan retorted, 'The allotted work has to be completed in time. Other thoughts are obstacles, not the amount of work. Doing the allotted work in time is itself meditation. Go ahead and do the job with full attention.'

In this way Sri Bhagavan taught us the importance of right, honest work.

In the ashram kitchen only brahmins were allowed to cook. That was because brahmins will not eat food that has been cooked by non-brahmins. Sri Bhagavan approved of this arrangement, not because he approved of religious orthodoxy in general, but because he didn't want to cause offence to the many brahmins who stayed in the ashram. Mostly Sri Bhagavan went along with orthodox dietary practices, but sometimes he was willing to bend the rules a little so long as no one found out or took offence. This can be seen from the following story.

When Sri Bhagavan was still living at Skandashram, Echammal, a brahmin devotee, used to feed him daily. She also took brahmin sannyasins into her home and gave them bhiksha in the traditional way.

Two disciples of Narayana Guru, Govindananda Giri and Achyutananda Giri, once came to visit from Kanchipuram. After staying a few days in the town, the two came to live with Sri Bhagavan. They were both well-built, fair-complexioned and learned. Taking them to be brahmins, Echammal invited them to her house. Neither party informed Sri Bhagavan about this arrangement.<sup>31</sup>

On the day that they had to go for bhiksha, Govindananda and Achyutananda informed Sri Bhagavan of the invitation. Sri Bhagavan immediately realised that there might be a problem. If Echammal discovered that they were non-brahmins, she might withdraw her hospitality. This would be a great embarrassment to the sannyasins.

To warn them indirectly, Sri Bhagavan asked with a smile, 'Do you know how to do parishechanam?'<sup>32</sup>

Govindananda and Achyutananda were quick to take the hint.

They answered, 'Yes Bhagavan. We observed this practice in North India where sannyasins do parishechanam before eating.'

The meal went off without incident. Sri Bhagavan kept from <sup>31</sup> Narayana Guru, in addition to being a spiritual teacher, campaigned actively for the uplift and emancipation of outcastes. He took outcaste boys, brought them up, taught them Sanskrit and educated them in Veda patasalas, which he founded. At the end of their schooling, the lighter-skinned graduates were indistinguishable from brahmin boys who had attended their own patasalas.

<sup>32</sup> A brahmin ritual of drawing three circles around the leaf plate with water before touching the food.

The Power of the Presence

Echammal all her life this secret of the non-brahmin sannyasins to whom she had offered bhiksha in her house.

In contrast to this there were occasions when he sided with the ultra-orthodox. When the ashram Veda Patasala was started in 1938, Sri Krishna Ganapatigal was appointed as its teacher. He was very orthodox. In the dining room at that time it was the practice to serve the brahmins first. Only afterwards would Sri Bhagavan and the non-brahmins be served. Once the food had been served to the non-brahmins from the serving bucket, an orthodox brahmin would consider the remaining food in the bucket to be polluted. Such a person would not therefore take a second helping from the same source. Sri Krishna Ganapatigal was very unhappy about the ashram's serving methods because he could not ask for extra food when he wanted some. He went to Sri Bhagavan and explained the problem. Sri Bhagavan accepted it as a valid complaint and made arrangements for Ganapatigal to eat separately in the kitchen. Not only that, he made a point of enquiring before he entered the dining room whether the patasala teacher had been fed properly. This went on for several days until Sri Bhagavan was satisfied that the arrangements were in place and would be permanent.<sup>33</sup>

---

<sup>33</sup> In the Moments Remembered account from which these two 'orthodoxy' stories are taken, Kunju Swami confesses that he could never make up his mind whether Bhagavan supported or opposed dietary orthodoxy. The question has been extensively debated in the Ramana literature. See 'Bhagavan the Atiasrami' (The Mountain Path 1991, pp. 112-21) and the references given in its footnotes for further details. Personally, I find no inconsistency in Bhagavan's behaviour. The following dietary rules that seemed to be in operation at the ashram do not seem to me to be mutually contradictory:

- 1 All food served in the ashram must be vegetarian.
- 2 Bhagavan was willing to bend the rules of orthodoxy on special occasions so long as no one who might take offence found out.
- 3 Indian visitors were expected to follow the same dietary regimes in the ashram that they followed in their own homes. If they observed strict brahmin rules at home, they were expected to continue observing them in the ashram.

Sri Bhagavan enjoyed his work in the kitchen. He worked thoroughly and painstakingly and expected everyone else to do the same. The way he prepared a humble vegetable such as spinach was an object lesson in patience, economy and the culinary art.

Early in the morning Sri Bhagavan would go to the kitchen to tackle the heaps of spinach that had been assembled there. We would all follow him. His instructions for cutting were quite specific:

‘The spinach should be cut into three parts. First the top; the leaves; second, the stem, and third, the root. The leaves are to be used for making curry. The stems are to be bundled together and tied. These are to be put into the boiling sambar and removed before serving. The roots are to be cleaned a number of times in water and then crushed three or four times on the grinding stone, each time taking the juice out until only the pure fibre is left. This juice is to be mixed with the rasam.’

This was the regular routine for cooking spinach. It meant a lot of work and Sri Bhagavan often ended up doing most of it himself.

Once, to save ourselves a lot of work, we took all the roots, bundled them up and buried them in the ground in a place that Sri Bhagavan did not usually frequent while he was out walking. That day, of course, Sri Bhagavan did deviate from his usual route and passed by that very spot. Seeing the earth freshly disturbed, he put his walking stick into it to investigate and some spinach roots surfaced.

Sri Bhagavan immediately knew what had happened. He sat down, dug out all the roots himself and began to clean them. Since the roots were all now covered with fresh mud, it took him a long time. After washing them, he went to the kitchen, crushed them repeatedly in the grinding stone till all the juice had been extracted. He himself put the juice into the rasam and only then did he continue with his walk. Sri Bhagavan did all this with a smile on his face, without a trace of irritation or anger. It was an object lesson for all of us who silently witnessed him with untold 4 Visitors who required special food or eating facilities because of their religious beliefs or health problems were always given them.

---

The Power of the Presence

feelings of guilt. That lesson was imprinted on our hearts so deeply that never afterwards did we think of idling or wasting anything.

I once went to Sri Santhalinga Math at Peraiyur, near Coimbatore, for the kumbhabhishekam of the Peraiyur Temple, which was being performed by the Nattukottai Chettiars. At their invitation, sadhus from Kovilur Math, Sadhu Swami and his group from Palani, and other learned sadhus had come and were staying in the math. Some of them were known to me since they had previously come to have Sri Bhagavan's darshan. After the kumbhabhishekam we had our meal and then started conversing. The sadhus who had known me earlier introduced me to the other sadhus, saying that I had come from Sri Ramanasramam.

On hearing this, the other sadhus said, 'Since we have all come together, let us discuss something'.

They first asked me to explain akhandakara vritti [unbroken experience]. As I could remember clearly the explanation Sri Bhagavan had given when devotees raised this question in his presence, I quoted the appropriate verse from Ribhu Gita and explained it. Then the sadhus asked me about pratibhanda [the three obstacles: ignorance, doubt and wrong knowledge]. This too I explained with a verse from Vedanta Chudamani. The sadhus were pleased with my explanation.

It occurred to me that I should know about the vedantic texts that were studied in the maths. I did not want to embarrass the ashram by being unable to discuss these matters when I was sent out by them as a representative. Sri Krishnananda Swami, who is presently the head of the Tirukhalar Math, and who was my boyhood friend, had also come to attend the kumbhabhishekam. He had taken lessons in Vedanta from Mahadeva Swami, the head of Kovilur Math. When I informed him of my intention, he said that sixteen texts, selected by Sri Narasimha Bharati Swamigal of Sringeri Math, were taken up for study. This swami had insisted that vedantins should not read secular literature and polemics.

My friend estimated that it would take many years for one to learn these texts in the proper way, so I asked him, 'I want to learn all these texts, but not in the traditional way. I will read them by myself. It will be enough if you explain the portions I cannot follow. Is it then possible to learn their meaning within two months?’

Seeing my keenness he replied, ‘We will try to complete them all in three months. You must come to Tirukhalar, though, to study them’.

After telling my friend that I would come to study with him as soon as I could, I returned to Sri Ramanasramam.

A few days after my return to the ashram I told Sri Bhagavan about the events that had taken place in Peraiyur.

I concluded: ‘When people from other maths who have studied Vedanta find out that I have come from Sri Ramanasramam, they start asking me philosophical questions. I feel that if I do not give fitting answers to their questions, it will reflect badly on our ashram. Because of this I asked Sri Krishnananda of Tirukhalar to give me lessons on Vedanta. He has asked me to come to Tirukhalar and he has agreed to give me lessons on Vedanta, and to complete them as early as possible. I am now thinking of going to Tirukhalar to learn Vedanta.’

Sri Bhagavan replied with a mocking smile, ‘Now you are going to study Vedanta, then it will be Siddhanta, then Sanskrit, and then polemics.’

As he kept adding more and more subjects, I stood before him dumbfounded.

Seeing my depressed look Sri Bhagavan said, ‘It is enough if you study the One’.

He could see that his answer had puzzled me, so he added, with some compassion, ‘If you learn to remain within your Self as the Self, that will amount to learning everything. What Vedanta lessons did I take? If you remain as the Self, the echo from the Heart will be from experience. It will be in agreement with the scriptures. This is what is called “the divine voice”.’

On hearing Sri Bhagavan’s words, the desire to learn Vedanta in order to answer the questions of others left me for good. From that day onwards, if someone asked me questions related to Vedanta, I was able, through Sri Bhagavan’s grace, to get the appropriate answer from within. As Sri Bhagavan himself has written in Atma Vidya Kirtanam, verse three:

The Power of the Presence

Without knowing the Self, what is the use if one knows anything else? If one has known the Self, what else is there to know? When that Self that shines without differences in different living beings is known within oneself, the light of Self will flash forth. It is the shining forth of grace, the destruction of 'I' and the blossoming of bliss.

Though Sri Bhagavan discouraged most of us from studying Vedanta in a formal way, he himself was a pandit par excellence. He knew all the great scriptural works and could, when the occasion demanded it, cite from them or comment on them with fluent ease. Jnana Vasishtam, a great philosophical work in Tamil, was one of the works that was often referred to and cited by Sri Bhagavan. It is a selection of verses dealing exclusively with the path of Self-knowledge, and it is a translation of the great Sanskrit work, Yoga Vasishta. In the early twenties Sri Bhagavan was going through it and in the process started correcting some of the printing errors. One chapter deals with the story of how King Janaka attained enlightenment after listening to the conversations of some siddhas. The conversation in the original Sanskrit covered six verses, but only five were found by Sri Bhagavan in the Tamil book. Sri Bhagavan translated the omitted verse into Tamil and added it to the margin of the book along with the Sanskrit original. It is this verse that can be found as the benedictory stanza of Ulladu Narpadu Anubandham [the Supplement to Forty Verses in Sri Bhagavan's Collected Works]. Here are the six verses. The third is the one that Sri Bhagavan translated and used as a benedictory verse:

- 1 When the knower and the known become one, then the bliss of the Self is experienced. This is known as Self-knowledge, and this is what one should aim at.
- 2 To eradicate the vasanas one should contemplate on the Self which bestows light on the seer, the seen and the act of seeing. One should thus contemplate on the eternal Self, which is the centre between being and non-being.

- 3 That in which all these worlds seem to exist steadily, that of which all these worlds are a possession, that from which all these worlds arise, that for which all these exist, that by which all these worlds come into existence and that which indeed is all these – that alone is the existing reality. Let us cherish that Self, which is the Reality, in the Heart.
- 4 One should contemplate the one eternal Self that reveals itself shining as ‘I-I’. Instead of seeking the truth in the Heart, the ignorant one goes in search of God outside himself. This is like a man throwing away the valuable kaustubha gem that he has in his hand and going after conch shells.
- 5 The Self can be realised only by those who have completely destroyed the hosts of desires. One should know that there is no happiness in the trouble-causing objects of both the past and the future. But if one clings to them, one will remain in bondage and will be no better than an ass.
- 6 Just as the celestial Indra struck down the mountains with his thunderbolt, let us strike at the senses, which raise their hoods as hissing snakes, with our powerful discriminative mind. By this the mind acquires peace, gets equanimity and becomes one with the blissful Self.

Sri Bhagavan told us the story of what happened next on several occasions. This is how he narrated it to us:

‘King Janaka, who was pure and ripe, overheard this teaching. On hearing the truth revealed in these verses by the siddhas, he became so detached, he lost all interest in the relative world. He left the affairs of his kingdom to his wise ministers and returned to his private apartments. Left alone, he followed the advice of the siddhas and contemplated one-pointedly on the truth. When he finally got the experience, these were his comments:

“With the destruction of sankalpa [will or intention], the mind will also be destroyed. When the root of the mind, which is the cause of trouble, is destroyed, the tree of birth and death will also be terminated. I have detected the thief who robbed me of the jewel that is my Self! His name is mind. I have been suffering for so long on account of this villain. I will now hang him and make him die.

“Till now, I have not been able to bore a hole in the pearl of mind. Now I will do so. I will make a rosary of it by stringing it on the thread of experience and wear it on my person.”

‘In this way the ripe mind of the king became introverted and merged with the Self. He remained in samadhi for a long time. In due course, when he came back to the relative plane, he realised that the Self was the substratum of all. Rooted in this consciousness, the Self, he resumed ruling his kingdom, his mind remaining totally detached from the consequences of all pairs of opposites such as pain and pleasure.’

Sri Bhagavan advises us to ‘be still’, to control the impulses of the mind and to rest in the Self, the knowledge of which transcends and even invalidates all other forms of knowledge. The silent grace of Sri Bhagavan enabled devotees to reach and discover this transcendental experience for themselves. It is a well-known fact that all those who came to Sri Bhagavan, irrespective of whether they were scholars or illiterates, got rid of their ignorance, egoism and anxieties and obtained peace through his gracious look.

One man who discovered this for himself was a pandit from North India who came for Sri Bhagavan’s darshan and stayed in the ashram for some days. Initially he sat before Sri Bhagavan and continuously read aloud verses from the Upanishads and other Sanskrit works. This proved to be a great inconvenience for the rest of us as we could neither speak to Sri Bhagavan nor meditate. As Sri Bhagavan had decided to listen to all his recitations very patiently, we could not say anything. Ten days passed in this way. One morning, the place near Sri Bhagavan where the pandit normally sat was vacant. The pandit was sitting quietly in a distant corner and the hall was immersed in silence.

Noticing my surprise Sri Bhagavan laughed and said in Malayalam [a language the pandit could not understand], ‘The pandit too has now become like us’.

Without spiritual experience and with mere book knowledge it is not possible to redeem either oneself or others. After emptying himself and his book knowledge into Sri Bhagavan, the sun of knowledge, the pandit became quiet.

Sri Bhagavan had no patience with devotees who were over-solicitous about his bodily needs and physical welfare. He used to tolerate a certain amount of zeal in strangers and devotees who were comparative newcomers, but he was severe with the older devotees who tried to pay special attention to him even in ordinary matters. He generally showed his displeasure by a stem silence, but at times he would also strongly rebuke the erring devotee and make him feel thoroughly ashamed of himself. In my younger days I once happened to incur his displeasure trying to save him from some bodily exertion that I thought was too much for him. He taught me a severe lesson that I still remember.

It happened in the 1920s at a time when the kitchen work was supervised by Dandapani Swami. Every day he used to make various kinds of chutney. Sri Bhagavan and he would work together on this. One of them would do the grinding on the stone mortar while the other one pushed in the ingredients. In those days, because there were only seven or eight permanent inmates in the ashram, Sri Bhagavan would frequently join us in the cutting and grinding work. Since Dandapani Swami was a brahmin, he would not allow any of us non-brahmins to do the grinding work. This meant that Sri Bhagavan had to do this heavy work almost every day. After some time Bhagavan developed blisters on his right index finger because of all the grinding work he was doing. Ramakrishna Swami and I were very disturbed when we saw this. We informed Dandapani Swami about Sri Bhagavan's blisters and asked him to discontinue, temporarily, the preparation of any chutney that involved grinding work.

He ignored our request so I went to Sri Bhagavan and told him in private, with great anguish, 'Bhagavan, you have blisters on your hand. From now on, please do not do any grinding work. It will be highly improper on our part to allow you to work like this. If you carry on, I won't eat anything prepared by you in this way.'

On the following day Dandapani Swami brought a lot of sour greens to the kitchen and arranged for the preparation of chutney.

The Power of the Presence

Dandapani Swami sitting next to Bhagavan in 1923

None of us volunteered to clean them prior to grinding. Since Sri Bhagavan did the grinding that day, I kept my promise and refused to take any chutney with my food. Someone informed Sri Bhagavan about this.

Just before the next meal Sri Bhagavan sent for me and asked, 'May I eat?'

I stood there perplexed.

Then Sri Bhagavan made fun of me, saying, 'If I don't obey the devotees, they won't eat. I have to act in accordance with their commands. When they come here, initially everyone is a sadhu. But as the days pass, they start giving orders even to me because they feel that Swami must obey whatever they say.'

I was shocked by his words but he gave me no chance to recover.

For the next three days he taunted me by asking my permission to do even the simplest thing: 'Can I have my bath? Can I eat? Can I go out to the toilet?'

After a few days I found that I could not bear his derisive remarks any more. I told Ramakrishna Swami about my mental anguish. Thinking that a change of scenery would bring about the required peace of mind, I told him I had a plan to go to Tirupati on the 6.30 p.m. train and that I would return after spending a few days there. I also mentioned my plan to Sri Bhagavan and got his permission to go.

That afternoon, a little after 3 p.m., Sri Bhagavan suddenly decided that he would go on a giri pradakshina. Ramakrishna Swami suggested that I accompany Sri Bhagavan and catch my train on the way through town. Since I thought it was a good idea, I took a dhoti and some other items for my trip and went with Sri Bhagavan and the others on pradakshina. On that particular day Sri Bhagavan started walking extremely slowly. As it would have been improper for me to go ahead of Sri Bhagavan, I too had to walk slowly. The 6.30 train left as we passed Kubera Lingam.

As he watched it go, Sri Bhagavan laughed and said, 'See, there goes your train! Quickly fly to it! Fly!'

All the others joined in his laughter but I was speechless. Later that evening we reached the ashram.

After we had eaten our supper, Dandapani Swami told Sri Bhagavan, 'It seems that he said that you should not grind chutney. Because of that remark you said that from now on everything should be done according to his orders. So, feeling that he might be rid of the mental agony if he went somewhere else, he started for Tirupati. He is now sorry that he behaved in a way that made Sri Bhagavan angry. He is now asking to be forgiven.'

Sri Bhagavan immediately answered, 'What anger do I have towards him? What wrong has he done? As he was unable to bear seeing the blisters on my hand, he refused to eat the chutney ground by me. What is there in this to get angry about? He thought that I got angry and so he wanted to go to Tirupati. What an intelligent fellow! Here he finds even the ashram food unappetising. He adds water to the sambar and rasam and swallows them as though they were medicine. What kind of food will he get elsewhere? Moreover, the man who taught him during his early days in Kerala put his hands in mine and asked me to look after him carefully. Before leaving, he handed him over to me. If tomorrow he came back and asked me, "Where is my disciple?" is it not I who will have to answer for him?

Sri Bhagavan laughed and concluded, 'And now this fellow wants to go to Tirupati!'

I felt very consoled and happy when I heard Sri Bhagavan speak like this. Was not all this a drama enacted by Sri Bhagavan himself to remove my egotistical thought, 'I am doing personal service to Sri Bhagavan. Only I am looking after his welfare.' Knowing that Sri Bhagavan had accepted me fully, I thought, how can there be room for anxiety and confusion?

Ramakrishna Swami once received a letter from his elder brother. It stated that Ramakrishna Swami's younger brother, Vasu, who was then studying in high school, was moving closely with a sadhu. This sadhu had taught him to concentrate on the spot between the eyebrows in order to get a vision of light. Prior to meeting this sadhu, Vasu, like us, had wanted to follow the path taught by Sri Bhagavan. The letter informed us that the intense concentration between the eyebrows had produced heat in his head. He had also become somewhat disturbed. He had a tendency to shout, 'Iswara! Arunachaleswara! Narayana!' [various names of God] and he was also suffering because he felt unable to eat or sleep. In order to bring him back to a normal state, his brother had requested that Ramakrishna Swami and I come home and look after him. Sri Bhagavan agreed and initially asked both of us to go. I felt that it would not be good if both of us went because in our absence there would be no one left to serve Sri Bhagavan.

With this thought in my mind I suggested that Ramakrishna Swami should go by himself, but he disagreed and said, 'I do not know anything about this sort of thing. You alone must go.' Sri Bhagavan then agreed with him and asked me to go alone. 'Only a visit from you will be effective,' he said.

After some discussion it was decided that I should take the evening train to Katpadi and from there go on to Palghat in Kerala. I had no money and Ramakrishna Swami only had enough to buy the train ticket. Although there was no extra money to buy food for the journey, we kept quiet, feeling that we should not trouble Sri Bhagavan with this problem. That afternoon, at around 3 p.m., a devotee unexpectedly brought a lot of pooris and served them to Sri Bhagavan and the devotees in the ashram. We were all surprised to see Sri Bhagavan, who normally did not take more than two pooris, happily accept six from the devotee. When the serving was over, Sri Bhagavan ate only one of the six and left the remaining five on the plate. Then he asked for paper and thread. He neatly packed and tied the five pooris with his own hands and gave me the packet.

He told the rest of us, 'This poor man has only enough money for the train. What will he do for food on the way?'

Everyone was deeply touched by Sri Bhagavan's compassion. I reached Palghat and went to Vasu's house. I had kept one of the five pooris to give to Vasu and his family as prasad from Sri Bhagavan. I then asked Vasu what spiritual practices he was doing. I soon realised that his undesirable state and experiences were due to his concentration on a vision of light he was perceiving as a result of focusing on the spot between the eyebrows. I explained to him that if he followed Sri Bhagavan's teachings it would be more beneficial for him, and that he should also do japa, keeping the Heart instead of the head as the goal. Unfortunately, because of the state he was in, he could not appreciate my advice. So, after consoling Vasu, I asked his elder brother to arrange to give him the best treatment available from the traditional Kerala school of medicine. Then I went back to Tiruvannamalai.

A few days later Vasu recovered. He began reading Sri Bhagavan's works, regained his mental clarity and resumed his school studies. I saw him a few months later when I went back to Kerala to arrange for the writing of Sri Bhagavan's biography in Malayalam.<sup>34</sup> On that journey I went to Palghat, taking with me

---

<sup>34</sup> This was not the first attempt to record Bhagavan's life in Malayalam. The following story is taken from The Mountain Path, 1982, p. 5:

'Soon after Kunju Swami arrived at the ashram a Malayalam visitor came to see Bhagavan, and after staying a few days in the ashram

The Power of the Presence

the English and Tamil biographies of Sri Bhagavan. I stayed there with Vasu, gave his teacher Appunni all the material and arranged for him to write Sri Bhagavan's life in Malayalam. I was happy to see that Vasu had made a complete recovery. In the years that followed Vasu came for Sri Bhagavan's darshan quite frequently. He eventually served in the army and remained a brahmachari all his life.

Once, while going on a pilgrimage, I visited various maths before ending up at Peraiyur Santhalinga Math. At that time Veerasubbia Swamigal was resting there because he was not well. When I went and had his darshan, he made kind enquiries about presented him with a manuscript which he said contained a biography of Bhagavan. The manuscript was in Malayalam, and since Bhagavan was familiar with the language, he accepted the manuscript and began to peruse it. He read it from beginning to end, occasionally stopping to make spelling or grammatical corrections to the text. When he had finally finished reading it he returned it to the author with a smile. This incident generated considerable excitement among the devotees since no biography of Bhagavan had ever appeared before. Unfortunately, though, no one in the ashram apart from Bhagavan could read Malayalam except Kunju Swami, and he was temporarily absent. When he eventually returned, he was given the manuscript and was asked to translate its contents for the benefit of the assembled devotees. Kunju Swami began to read the account but was horrified at what he read. The biography was mostly fiction. Among other things it stated that Bhagavan was married and it gave a long list of all the siddhis he had attained and all the spectacular miracles he had performed. None of them were true.

---

Kunju Swami rushed off to see Bhagavan and asked him, 'Is all this true?'

Bhagavan looked at him quietly for a while and then said, pointing at the world, 'Is all this true? [Then, pointing at the manuscript] Is this alone false?'

The manuscript was never published since the author was unable to find a publisher who would take his work.

The account seemed to be a classic case of projection because another old devotee who knew about this manuscript told me that in the book Bhagavan was made out to be a former railway clerk with several children. Its author was also a railway clerk who was married and had several children.

the welfare of Sri Bhagavan and the ashram in general. He also looked into the notebook I had with me. Seeing in it the verses of Ulladu Narpadu written beautifully by Sri Bhagavan himself, he asked me to read them out to him. He appreciated the first benedictory verse so much, he asked me to read it three times.

After the third reading he remarked, 'This is a very profound verse. Not only that, all the elegant features of prosody are in it. Until now, I was under the impression that your swami was an adept only in "keeping still", but now I discover that he is also a superb writer of fine poetry. The venba is itself a difficult metre that few poets dare attempt. Bhagavan has composed all forty-two verses in this metre and used them to convey the most abstruse philosophical ideas. Crowning them all, though, is this first invocatory verse:

'If the Reality [Being] did not exist, could there exist the consciousness 'am'? Since Reality exists in the Heart, devoid of thought, how can one meditate upon that Reality whose name is 'Heart'? Abiding in the Heart as it is alone is meditation.<sup>35</sup>

'I myself,' continued Veerasubbia Swamikal, 'possess the attainment of sastra samadhi. When I start reading or writing books, I am so completely immersed in them, I will not even be aware of hunger, thirst, or even the passage of time. Only when someone comes and reminds me will I get up and complete my daily duties. Now that the doctor has asked me to take a complete rest, I find it extremely difficult to keep quiet without engaging in <sup>35</sup> In Tamil this is a literary tour de force to which no English translation can do justice. The repeated motif throughout the verse is the Tamil root ul that is both the infinitive and the imperative of the verb to be. Ul is repeated eight times, sometimes as ullam, which means 'the Heart' or 'am'. The repetitions of ul indicate both the nature of reality and the means by which it can be experienced. Taken together they point out that Being alone exists as Reality, as the Heart, and that one cannot meditate on it, because there is no entity separate from it to do the meditating. One can only be it. All this has been phrased in elegant pure Tamil in a metre of daunting complexity.

---

The Power of the Presence

reading and writing. So, since you are here, please read out to me the works of Sri Bhagavan.'

I read out Sri Bhagavan's written works, which I had copied in my notebook, and he very much enjoyed listening to them.

He told the other sadhus in the math, 'Because Sri Bhagavan left school at sixteen and did not take lessons in Vedanta from any guru, some people think that he does not know any Vedanta. But the greatness of the vedantic tradition and the depth of Sri Bhagavan's experience of it are clearly to be found in these works.'

After speaking joyfully in such glowing terms, he pointed to me and said, 'See how well he reads Tamil even though he is a Malayali. This is also due to the greatness of the place he lives in.'

On my return to the ashram I told Sri Bhagavan about the conversations that had taken place at the math and about my reading out his verses.

Sri Bhagavan heard my story and remarked, 'Veerasubbia Swamigal is a great scholar. He has translated the Hindi Atma Purana into Tamil and written a commentary on Jnana Vasishtam. He is also the head of all the vedantins of Kovilur Math.'

Sri Bhagavan was then reminded of an incident which had taken place many years before: 'When I was in Virupaksha Cave, Veerasubbia Swamigal came to see me along with some other heads of maths. When all were sitting quietly, those who had come with Veerasubbia Swamigal gestured to him.

'He acknowledged the gesture and spoke to me with great hesitation:

"Swami, these people want to have their questions answered by you. Although I myself do not want to trouble you, I am asking you merely because they want to have their desire fulfilled."

'Then, acting as their spokesman, he asked me about the spiritual practices leading to sahaja nirvikalpa samadhi. I explained to them the six types of samadhi and how, through strength of practice, sahaja nirvikalpa samadhi could be attained.

'I told them that one who has attained this state, although he sees, he does not see; though he listens, he does not listen; though he acts, he does not act. I showed them my Tamil translation of Adi Sankara's Vivekachudamani and Drik Drishya Viveka and pointed to the six types of samadhi that are mentioned there. On seeing these works Veerasubbia Swamigal was overjoyed, while the others were struck with wonder.<sup>36</sup>

Only a great one can appreciate another great person. Was it not due to my past merit that I had the good fortune of staying with these two great men and listening to their appreciative remarks as they praised each other?

Sri Bhagavan once commented on his own experience of the sahaja state of samadhi after a concert that had been arranged by Rao Bahadur Veerappa Chettiar, a hereditary trustee of the Arunachaleswara Temple. Every year, during the annual Karttikai festival, he arranged concerts in the temple by famous musicians. Some of them would also perform in the ashram. On one such occasion Ariakkudi Ramanuja Iyengar gave a music concert accompanied by Pudukkottai Dakshinamurty Pillai and Sundaram Iyer. The concert lasted from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m. Sri Bhagavan, who usually went out at 5.30 p.m., stayed for the whole performance. Both the performers and the listeners totally forgot themselves in the joy of being and performing in Sri Bhagavan's presence. At the end of the concert, when the performers came out of the hall after prostrating to Sri Bhagavan, Kumbakonam Iyengar Swami gave them tambulam [a mixture wrapped in a betel leaf, eaten as an aid to digestion or merely for pleasure] and put sandal paste on them with his own hands. All this was to show his appreciation of the performers. Sri Bhagavan, who was observing all this through the window, was delighted by Iyengar Swami's enthusiasm. The artists and the other visitors returned to town in a state of great satisfaction.

Later, when we were all resting after finishing our supper, a devotee said to Sri Bhagavan, 'Today's concert was superb. We even forgot where we were. I wonder what it was like for Sri Bhagavan?'

Sri Bhagavan answered, 'I was only aware of their coming, their prostrations to me and the beginning of their performance.'

<sup>36</sup> The six samadhis are listed in a tabular form in Talks with Sri Ramana Maharshi, talk no. 391, along with a brief explanation. They are also explained in Guru Ramana, 6th ed., pp. 87-91.

The Power of the Presence

After that, the next thing I remember is their getting up at the end of the concert. The person within me consumes everything. Who then can do the listening?’

From this remark it is clear that Sri Bhagavan himself is a living testimony to his earlier comment about one who is in sahaja nirvikalpa samadhi: ‘Though he sees, he does not see; though he hears, he does not hear; though he acts, he does not act.’

At the end of the Karttikai festival, this same Veerappa Chettiar used to arrange, on a large scale, a bhiksha in the ashram for Sri Bhagavan.

When Seshadri Swami fell ill and looked as though he was going to die, Veerappa Chettiar wanted to build a samadhi shrine for him. He came and asked Sri Bhagavan about the rules to be followed in its construction. Sri Bhagavan took out Tirumular’s Tirumantiram and asked someone to copy out the relevant verses and give them to Chettiar. Using this account, Chettiar constructed the samadhi on the land adjoining Sri Ramanasramam, completing it in twenty days. On the day after he completed it [14th January, 1929] Sri Seshadri Swami, who wanted to give up his body, attained mahasamadhi. Sri Bhagavan was invited to attend the samadhi ceremony by Veerappa Chettiar and a few other devotees. He obliged them by attending and staying till it was over. After participating in the samadhi ceremony of his mother in 1922, this was the only similar function that Sri Bhagavan attended.<sup>37</sup>

Seshadri Swami

---

<sup>37</sup> During the course of a conversation I had with him, Kunju Swami told me that both he and Bhagavan attended Jada Swami’s funeral service in the late 1920s. Bhagavan also attended the burial

Sri Bhagavan often pointed out that the sahaja, or 'natural' samadhi state, was quite different from states such as laya in which the mind becomes so deeply absorbed in a trance that the person who experiences it cannot easily be roused to a normal waking consciousness. An Andhra man called Sankarananda, who was employed in the Postal Department, used to stand in water and do japa for hours at a time. While doing this japa he would often go into laya samadhi and be unable to perform any work. He took some days off from his job and came for Sri Bhagavan's darshan, but whenever he sat in the hall, he used to go into a state of laya.

Seeing this, Sri Bhagavan said, 'Laya [an unconscious mental stupor], vikshepa [diversity] and kashaya [latent impurities] are the three obstacles to jnana. The practices of sravana, manana and nididhyasana [hearing, recollection and contemplation] have been created to prevent one from being caught in laya. Do not allow him [Sankarananda] to remain sitting in one place. Make him walk around to stop him falling into laya. Engage him in conversation about self-enquiry. If you do all these things he will be cured of his problem.'

As a result of our following these instructions, Sankarananda's laya state changed and he became a follower of the path of self-enquiry.

The sahaja state is a permanent one. It is not a state that one enters or leaves. A visit to the ashram by Satchidananda Yogeeswara of Cudappa, a man who went 'into' and 'out of' samadhi, gave us an opportunity to explain the real nature of sahaja samadhi. The swami, a famous hatha yogi, was touring the whole of India, staying in all the important ashrams for three days and giving discourses. During his tour he also came to Tiruvannamalai. He visited the ashram, conversed for some time with Sri Bhagavan, and then returned to where he was staying in town. Since those who had accompanied him invited us to come and listen to his discourse, I and a devotee called Palanimalai, who was a knowledgeable man, went to attend the meeting.

When we arrived we were told by one of his followers, 'Swami ceremonies of the animals that are interred in the ashram.

---

The Power of the Presence

is in samadhi. He will come out of it at a specific time and only after that will the discourse start.'

Then he asked us, 'At what times is your Bhagavan in samadhi?'

Hearing this, Palanimalai Swami could not suppress a burst of laughter, though he tried unsuccessfully to change it into an 'Is that so?' The disciple of the yogi asked us the reason for his laughter.

I replied, 'There is no schedule for jnanis. They do not go into samadhi or come out of it at specific times. Because he knows this he had to laugh when he heard you speak about entering and leaving samadhi.'

Then, to make my meaning more clear, I added, 'Sri Bhagavan is always in sahaja nishta [the natural state]'

After staying there for some time and listening to his discourse, we returned to the ashram. As usual, Sri Bhagavan enquired about what had taken place at the meeting.

When I told him what had happened, he said with a smile, 'People are under the impression that the state of samadhi is something limited by times and places. They think that sitting still in one place for hours together, without any movement and with the eyes closed, alone is samadhi. What to do?'

There is a verse in Jnana Vasishtam about samadhi:

Those who do not have perfect peace will not get established in samadhi, even if they sit in padmasana with their hands in special positions. Only Self-knowledge, which is a fire for the straws of desires, is superb samadhi. Remaining still is not samadhi.

Sri Bhagavan has himself said in verse thirty-one of Ulladu Narpadu Anubandham:

As the movement of the cart, its standing still and its being unyoked are to the passenger asleep in the cart, even so are action, contemplation and sleep to the sage asleep in the cart of his body.

In 1932, after spending about twelve years in personal attendance on Sri Bhagavan, I began to feel an urge to devote myself entirely to sadhana. I wanted to spend all my time alone. However, I could not easily reconcile myself to the idea of giving up my personal services to Sri Bhagavan. I had been debating the matter for some days when the answer came in a strange way. As I entered the hall one day I heard Sri Bhagavan explain to others who were there that real service to him did not mean attending to his physical needs, it meant following the essence of his teachings. That is, concentrating on realising the Self. Needless to say, that automatically cleared my doubts.

I had heard Sri Bhagavan speak like this before. Once I had heard him say, 'It is no use saying to oneself, "I am doing personal service to Sri Bhagavan; I am dusting his bed; I have served him for so many years". In addition to serving the Guru physically, it is also important to follow the path shown by the Guru. The best service to the Guru is engaging in vichara, dhyana and other practices with a purity of body, speech and mind.'

When Sri Bhagavan spoke like this he would often point out verse eighty-seven of Kaivalyam, part one, in which the disciple asks the Guru how he can repay him for the grace he has received. The Guru replies that the highest return the disciple can render to the Guru is to remain fixed in the Self without being caught by the three kinds of obstacles that obstruct it. Hearing Sri Bhagavan speak like this made me resolve to find a new attendant so that I could devote myself full-time to meditation.

While I was in this frame of mind I paid a visit to Palanimalai Swami, a devotee of Sri Bhagavan who had started an ashram in a village in Kerala. During my stay there, he introduced me to a man called Madhavan. He told me that this Madhavan would like to stay in a math and, knowing of my knowledge of such places, asked me to arrange it. Instead, I asked Madhavan to come to Tiruvannamalai. I visited a few other places on my trip and then returned to Tiruvannamalai. Madhavan arrived soon afterwards.

In those days, as Sri Bhagavan was in good health, there was not much work either for me or for Ramakrishna Swami, Sri Bhagavan's other attendant. I therefore thought that I would ask Madhavan to do service to Sri Bhagavan instead of me so that

Madhava Swami serving Bhagavan water on the lower slopes of Arunachala

I could go and live in Palakottu and practise self-enquiry. He agreed, and I spent a week teaching him how to be Sri Bhagavan's personal attendant. Then, one night, when Sri Bhagavan was alone, I approached him and asked for his permission to give up my job and live in Palakottu. I told him that till then I had been spending most of my time attending on him. I formally asked his permission to give up this job and requested him to tell me how I should lead my life in Palakottu. Sri Bhagavan's answer gave me the impression that my request was both proper and correct.

He said, with a smile, 'It is enough if the mind is kept one-pointedly on vichara, dhyana, japa and parayana without seeking anything else'.

I left feeling that I had received the full blessings of Sri Bhagavan.

Though I had given up my ashram duties, I found it hard to decide how exactly I should spend the entire day in search of realisation. I referred the matter to Sri Bhagavan and he amplified the advice he had already given me.

‘Make self-enquiry your final aim,’ he said, ‘but also practise meditation, japa and parayana. If you find one method irksome or difficult, switch to one of the others. In the course of time the sadhana will become stabilised in self-enquiry and will culminate in pure consciousness or realisation.’

I left the ashram early the next morning and stayed in the room adjacent to the Vinayaka Temple in Palakottu, observing silence all the time. Sabapathy Pillai, the pujari of the Vinayaka Temple, had a high regard for sadhus and was devoted to their well-being. He used to come from the town at 5.30 a.m. for Sri Bhagavan’s darshan. Afterwards he would have his bath in Palakottu and perform the daily worship of the Vinayaka image, offering cooked rice as naivedya. Later, he would take sambar from the ashram, mix it with this rice and eat it. In the evening he would collect flowers for the big temple, come for Sri Bhagavan’s darshan, and then return to town.

On the first day of my stay at Palakottu, Sabapathy Pillai noticed that I was in mauna and that I had not taken any food, so he gave me a portion of the naivedya. I happily ate it. He continued to share his food with me on each of the succeeding days. Even while I had been staying in the ashram I had only eaten one meal a day. I would just take lunch there and eat some fruit in the evening, if any was available. I did not therefore find it difficult to live on one meal a day.

I soon established a new routine. In the mornings and evenings I would go to the ashram and sit in the presence of Sri Bhagavan. On my evening visit I would join in the parayana. After one week had passed in this way a man called Puduppalayam Rangaswami Gounder came to the ashram.

Sri Bhagavan asked him, ‘Why have you made this unexpected visit? Have you come to see your friend?’ Sri Bhagavan was referring to me.

Gounder replied, ‘I have not yet seen him, but I intend to go to see him soon’.

Then he added, ‘Sri Bhagavan appeared to me in a dream last night and asked me, "Why are you sleeping like this when your friend is going without food?" So I left immediately and came here.'

The Power of the Presence

Sri Bhagavan smiled and said, 'All right, go and see him after taking your meal'.

Munagala Venkataramaiah standing in Palakottu. Yogi Ramaiah and Krishnaswami at different times lived in a small room under the large rock that can be seen behind his head. Kunju Swami's hut is to Munagala's right.

Because I was observing silence, when Gounder came to see me he could only ascertain what had happened by talking to Sabapathy Pillai. Then, when he discovered how precarious my position was, he gave Rs 25 to Sabapathy Pillai and asked him to look after all my needs. He stayed in the ashram for a few more days before returning to Puduppalayam. Three weeks later another devotee called Kannuswami, who lived in Kumbakonam and who came frequently for Sri Bhagavan's darshan, came to the ashram. After looking in vain for me inside the ashram he came to Palakottu and found me there. When he saw that I was living on cold rice supplied by others, he thought that it would be better if I cooked my own food. On returning to Kumbakonam he sent me a cooker and some money for my expenses. Narasimhaswami, an expert on cookers, taught me how to use it. With money, food and cooking equipment at my disposal, I began a new phase of my stay in Palakottu.

Other sadhus soon began to settle down in Palakottu. Paul Brunton, Bhikku Prajnananda, Munagala Venkataramaiah, Viswanatha Swami, Yogi Ramaiah, Muruganar Swami and Mouni Srinivasa Rao all built or moved into huts there. Devotees from outside Tiruvannamalai would, after having Sri Bhagavan's darshan, often come to tranquil Palakottu to see the sadhus who lived there. Palakottu in those days was like Swargashram near Swami Sivananda's ashram in Rishikesh: a place where many sadhus lived a simple life in close proximity to a neighbouring large ashram.

After I had settled down in Palakottu, I got into the habit of going to Skandashram early in the morning. As I walked up the hill I would do parayana. I would have my morning bath there and return at about 7.30 a.m. Since this was the time that Sri Bhagavan had his after-breakfast walk on the hill, I was always able to have a darshan on my return trip.

When Sri Bhagavan learned that I was doing continuous parayana while going to and from Skandashram, he said appreciatively, 'That alone is good. Very appropriate. If you carry on like this, you will also be relieved of the strain of walking.'

From that time till now, while walking in the morning, I always do parayana.

One of the devotees who joined us in Palakottu was Ramanatha Brahmachari. He was the boy, mentioned earlier, whom Sri Bhagavan had looked after when the former had had bubonic plague. Ramanatha Brahmachari was a tireless worker, and in addition to being a devotee of Sri Bhagavan, he was also a follower of Mahatma Gandhi.

Of his own accord he would clean all our huts in Palakottu.

The Power of the Presence

In the evening he would prepare the wicks, pour oil and light the lamps. He was always looking for odd jobs to do.

In those days we were all quite young and thought we were great ascetics. We would not bother to sweep our rooms in Palakottu, nor care to light the lamps. If there was no fuel, we might even skip our meals. But Ramanatha Brahmachari would take care of all these chores whether we asked him to or not.

Once, when we were all sitting in front of Sri Bhagavan, a letter was received from Ekanatha Rao. He had made enquiries about 'the sarvadhikari of Palakottu'.

When Sri Bhagavan read that, he enquired, 'Who is this? I don't know anything about this.'

I got up and nervously pointed to Ramanatha Brahmachari. 'We call him the sarvadhikari of Palakottu. He buys our things, cleans our lamps, sweeps our floors. So we call him the Palakottu sarvadhikari.'<sup>38</sup>

Sri Bhagavan said, 'Why didn't you tell me about this? With a sarvadhikari like this, everyone should be happy.'

Ramanatha Brahmachari got up very shyly and said, 'I don't know, Bhagavan. They gave me that name as a joke.'

'What is funny about it?' asked Sri Bhagavan. 'It is a good name.'

Years later, when news came to the ashram that Ramanatha Brahmachari had passed away in Madras, Sri Bhagavan remarked, 'Look! These verses, Ramana Stotra Anubhuti, were written by Ramanatha himself. Another song with the refrain Tiruchuzhinathanai kandene was also written by him. It has an interesting story.

---

<sup>38</sup> Sarvadhikari literally means 'ruler of all'. It was the title assumed by Chinnaśwami, Sri Bhagavan's brother, when he took over the ashram management. Prior to that time different people had looked after different aspects of the ashram's affairs. By calling himself the sarvadhikari, Chinnaśwami was indicating that he was in sole charge of all the ashram's different departments. However, the title is often used in a pejorative way. A totalitarian dictator would also be called a sarvadhikari in Tamil. That is why Kunju Swami was a little nervous about telling this story to Bhagavan.

Ramanatha Brahmachari is standing in the centre behind Bhagavan. Annamalai Swami, who also lived in Palakottu for many years, is on his right.

A group photo taken outside Virupaksha Cave. Ramanatha Brahmachari is sitting at the end of the front row on the left.

The Power of the Presence

‘During my stay in Virupaksha Cave, one full moon night we set out on a giri pradakshina. Chidambaram Subramanya Iyer was here at that time. The moonlight was bright and all were in high spirits. The devotees decided to hold a symposium while on the move and each person was to give a speech on a different subject. Subramanya Iyer was elected chairman of the meeting. The first lecture was by Ramanatha. The topic chosen by him was: “The similarity between the Paramatman dwelling in the cave of the human Heart, Lord Nataraja dwelling in Chidambaram, and Sri Ramana in Virupaksha Cave.” The chairman allowed him half an hour. There was no end to the points of similarity brought out by him. When the chairman declared that the time was up, Ramanatha said, “Just half an hour more please”. It was a meeting of people who were continuously walking. Saying, “A little more time, a little more time,” he went on with his speech for three full hours before the chairman finally put a stop to his further talking. You should have seen the enthusiasm with which he spoke that day.’

Ramanatha Brahmachari later summarised the points of the lecture into a song of four stanzas entitled Tiruchuzhinathanai Kandene. Part of this song reads:

I have seen the Lord of Tiruchuzhi and, unable to turn back, I stood there transfixed. He is the Lord who dances in Chidambaram, protects the helpless and is merciful to them. The same Lord of Tiruchuzhi manifests himself as God in Virupaksha Cave on the hill in sacred Tiruvannamalai ... . He is the Lord of Tiruchuzhi. I saw him and stood there, unable to move.<sup>39</sup>

At about 11 a.m. after the lunch bell went in the ashram, the residents of Palakottu returned to their homes. After finishing his lunch Sri Bhagavan would come to Palakottu to visit us. All of us would be waiting there to have his darshan. Sri Bhagavan would enquire about our welfare and make us, who had taken refuge in him, feel happy by his motherly affection and solicitude.

---

<sup>39</sup> Ramanatha Brahmachari had first come to Bhagavan as a teenager in 1912. At the time he was studying in the Veda Patasala in town. One look from Sri Bhagavan was enough to capture his heart. From then on he spent every spare moment with Sri Bhagavan on the hill. It is this look which is referred to in the poem.

Bhagavan walking in Palakottu with Krishnaswami.

During my stay in Palakottu I invariably went to the ashram to attend the daily parayana. Although I was no longer Sri Bhagavan's attendant, in my early years in Palakottu I still managed to speak to him at least once a day. But when the ashram expanded in the 1930s, the number of visitors increased so much, there were occasionally days when I could not speak even a single word to him. On such days during parayana I would deliberately leave out a line of the text I was reading from. Sri Bhagavan, who would always listen attentively to the parayana, would immediately correct the mistake. By making mistakes in this way I would get the satisfaction of having Sri Bhagavan say a few words to me. I would use a similar trick when I wanted Sri Bhagavan to write in my parayana notebook: while copying, I would leave out a line in the middle. Sri Bhagavan would invariably notice it and correct it for me. Sri Bhagavan made many such entries in my book. I still keep that notebook with me and preserve it as a treasure.

On one occasion I wanted to paste a picture of Arunachala in the front of this notebook. Sri Bhagavan, who was compassion incarnate, somehow came to know of my desire. He took the notebook and drew a beautiful picture of Arunachala on one of the pages with his own hands. This picture of Arunachala appeared for many years on the cover of The Mountain Path.

The Power of the Presence

Many of us had the good fortune of having little books with Sri Bhagavan's handwriting in them. Those who did not have personal notebooks would often have little pamphlets containing Sri Bhagavan's written works in which Sri Bhagavan himself had made some proof-reading marks. Whenever books such as Ulladu Narpadu or Upadesa Undiyar were printed, all the page proofs would be shown to Sri Bhagavan. After he had corrected them, he would make a book out of them. If any pages were missing, he would copy them out neatly himself. By preserving and binding all these printer's proofs, he was able to make an additional two or three copies of each book. Sri Bhagavan would always keep the copy that had the maximum number of mistakes before giving the others to devotees in the hall.

At distribution time he would say, 'These are enough for us. If we wanted to have new copies, where would we go for the money? No one will want copies like these and no one will steal them.'

In this way, through his kind words, he ensured that we were conscious of the merit of having few or no possessions.

* * *

Everyone knows what great stress Sri Bhagavan lays on atma-vichara, self-enquiry. He wrote in Atma Vidya Kirtanam, 'Self-knowledge is an easy thing, the easiest thing there is'.

Yet, surprisingly, not once of his own accord did he ever ask any devotee to follow this method. He could have ordered the practice of self-enquiry, and all the devotees would have blindly and willingly followed.

Let me give some examples. Yogi Ramaiah, who was very close to Sri Bhagavan for many years, used to practise hatha yoga. Sri Bhagavan approved of the ashram providing him with a special diet that was part of his yogic regimen. Sri Bhagavan would visit him in his cave in Palakottu, and Yogi would accompany him on his walks. Yogi was quite free to be with Sri Bhagavan whenever he chose. Yet there is nothing on record to show that Sri Bhagavan ever told him to do atma-vichara instead of pranayama or hatha yoga.

Yogi Ramaiah sitting with Bhagavan.

Mudaliar Patti's son, Tambiran Swami, was a Virasaiva and followed the practices of this sect. He would collect flowers from the garden only at noon. Then he would perform a puja at the tank in Palakottu, making a lingam out of the flowers, and worship the same lingam with more flowers. Day after day Sri Bhagavan would watch this without making any comment.

Tambiran Swami was a very weak and slow-moving man. By the time he had finished his cooking and had his meal after this late puja, it would be evening.

Sri Bhagavan once joked, 'Poor god. He has to wait so long for naivedya food offering since the puja itself takes so long to complete.'

But never once did Sri Bhagavan tell him, 'Why do you waste your time like this? You could spend your time better by doing self-enquiry.'

Sri Bhagavan never even asked close devotees whether they meditated or did self-enquiry. His teaching was the highest, but it was left entirely to us to practise it or to leave it.

The Power of the Presence

I will give one more example. During the early years of the ashram, one could not avoid noticing an enormous man called Dandapani Swami who first came to see Sri Bhagavan when the latter was still living at Skandashram. A couple of days after his arrival he said to Sri Bhagavan that although he had a large family, he was renouncing all worldly activities. He also said that he was taking Sri Bhagavan as his sole refuge and requested him to give him some upadesa.

‘What is upadesa?’ responded Sri Bhagavan, ‘It is only remaining in the Self as the Self.’

Dandapani Swami persisted with his request and asked Sri Bhagavan several times for some specific upadesa. Knowing that he would not give up asking, Sri Bhagavan eventually asked him what practices he had been doing in the past.

Dandapani Swami answered, ‘I know nothing, but I have performed ten million Rama nama japa’.

‘That is enough,’ said Sri Bhagavan. ‘What more is needed? It will be enough if you can continue that practice without a break.’

When Dandapani Swami then asked him how to do japa properly, Sri Bhagavan replied, ‘There are three kinds of japa: uccha japa, upamsu japa and manasika japa. Uccha japa is done with lip movements. Superior to this is upamsu japa in which the mantra is muttered to oneself inaudibly. The best is manasika japa in which the mantra is uttered using the mind itself as the mouth. It will be enough if you can continuously practise in this way.’

On hearing this Dandapani Swami felt satisfied. After staying for some time in the ashram he returned to Madras. It is interesting to note that some years later, wearing only a loincloth, he went to the house of his son-in-law, Subramania Iyer, who was then a pandit in Northwick School, Rayapuram. Telling him that he had become a sannyasin and that he received upadesa from Sri Bhagavan, he gave a copy of Aksharamanamalai to him. This visit by Dandapani Swami was instrumental in bringing Subramania Iyer, who was later known as Muruganar, to Sri Bhagavan.

Sri Bhagavan often read out passages from the Malayalam version of the Adhyatma Ramayana. One of his favourite passages was one in which Hanuman explains to Ravana the glory of devotion to Rama. Sri Bhagavan quoted this passage when Dandapani Swami asked for some upadesa. He knew that Dandapani Swami, a confirmed Rama bhakta, would appreciate the passage and that it would encourage him to continue with his Rama japa. Sri Bhagavan's response on this occasion was a typical one. Whenever someone begged him for some special upadesa, he used to ask him what he was already practising. If the questioner said that he had done no sadhana, Sri Bhagavan would often ask him which of the gods or goddesses he liked best. The devotee was bound to mention Rama or Krishna or Devi or some other deity. Sri Bhagavan would then ask him to think of that god or goddess constantly. He never discouraged anyone or decried the beliefs and practices of others. Thus it was that Dandapani Swami, who was a simple devotee of Rama, was advised by Sri Bhagavan to continue with his devotional practices.

Sri Bhagavan's presence and teachings gave hope and strength to different classes of seekers at different levels. As I have already demonstrated, the teachings were not limited to those who did pure enquiry, as is often assumed. Sri Bhagavan gave help and guidance to all kinds of people on all kinds of paths and never demanded that devotees change from one sadhana to another.

An important corollary of this is that it is the intensity of one's practice and the one-pointedness with which one follows it that secures results, irrespective of the method chosen. Chanting of stotras, japa, dhyana and self-enquiry are generally held to be ascending stages of sadhana. Sri Bhagavan confirmed this, but he also made clear that this did not mean that all stages were necessarily to be gone through by everyone. There have been notable exceptions. For example, the four great Tamil saints, Appar, Jnanasambandhar, Sundaramurti and Manikkavachagar, who sang the praises of Lord Siva. They achieved akhandakara vritti [unbroken experience] merely by constantly remembering the name of God. With these saints, where was the need for self-enquiry? Its result was already there.

Sri Bhagavan's non-interference extended to our personal lives.

The Power of the Presence

Unless asked directly, he would not tell us what to do, what not to do, where to go and so on. Nayana, for example, was very much respected by Sri Bhagavan. But when he was about to leave for Sirsi, never to return to Arunachala, Sri Bhagavan did not say, 'Why should you go? You can stay here itself.'

Muruganar, another great devotee, used to go out begging for his food while the ashram was serving food to hundreds of people. Sri Bhagavan never asked him why he took the trouble of begging when he could eat in the ashram itself. Sri Bhagavan was utterly detached from these things, for nothing ever affected him.

I can give an even more extreme example. Once when Sri Bhagavan's brother, Niranjanananda Swami, was being physically lifted and carried away by a group of people who were threatening to kill him, he was absolutely unperturbed. He did not even turn his head in their direction. In the evening when Niranjanananda Swami came back unharmed and sat in front of Sri Bhagavan, he took no notice of his safe return. Of course it was his grace that saved Niranjanananda Swami that day – but that is a different matter altogether.

Totally detached, Sri Bhagavan was never affected by events like these. It was not that he did not notice what was going on around him. On the contrary, if someone walked in after a twenty-year absence, Sri Bhagavan would immediately recognise him and would often give a detailed account of what that person had been doing and saying on his previous trip twenty years before.

This attitude of aloof detachment may possibly have arisen out of his samatva bhava, his feeling that, as all are phenomena appearing in the Self, all people and all things are equal, and of the same nature.

If anyone tried to tell Sri Bhagavan, 'You are a realised sage, we are ignorant and unrealised,' he would respond by saying, 'Where is the ignorance and who is unrealised?'

There were no others for him to see, no devotees at different levels of spiritual evolution. In his sight everyone was a jnani and everything was the Self.

In the old days, when we had the benefit of regularly receiving personal instructions from Sri Bhagavan, one of them was that we should get into a meditative state before going to sleep. If this was done, Sri Bhagavan said, sleep overtook one as a natural sequel to fatigue and was not induced or preceded by lying down. Also, we were advised to go into meditation first thing in the morning, immediately after getting out of bed. This ensured a serenity of mind and also a feeling of tirelessness throughout the day. If this was done, he said, the state of mind experienced immediately before sleep is resumed on waking.

Sri Bhagavan also stressed the importance of developing good tendencies, likening the practice to sowing a ripe seed. A ripe seed thrown carelessly on rocky soil will sprout and grow, even after a thousand years. It will never go to waste. Likewise, good tendencies.

Ultimately whatever path one takes, one needs the grace of the Lord.

Sri Bhagavan was asked on one occasion, 'You have written, in Atma Vidya Kirtanam, "Self-knowledge is an easy thing, the easiest thing there is". Other people say it is the most difficult thing to get. Can one get this Self-knowledge so easily, and unaided?'

Sri Bhagavan pointed out that the final words of the verse read, 'Grace, too, is needed'.

This, he said, was the key to understanding the whole verse.

The grace of the Guru works in different ways. In scriptures the working of grace is compared to the ways in which fish, tortoises and birds cause their eggs to hatch. The ancients believed that the mere look of the fish was sufficient to bring life to its eggs. The tortoise, they believed, stayed at some distance from its eggs and by the power of its presence and by its intense concentration on them, caused its eggs to hatch. The third category, the birds, need to have physical contact with their eggs. Sitting on them, they incubate them by the warmth of their body. In this analogy it is the fish which is the most powerful. By their mere look, their eggs hatch.

This is how Sri Bhagavan's grace worked. He did not need to initiate or transmit grace by touching devotees, nor did he even seem to need to concentrate on them. A single look was often enough to transform whomever his gaze fell upon. All those who have experienced that look of grace can testify to the tremendous impact it had on them. That silent look transmitted his highest teachings.

A devotee once complained that Sri Bhagavan gave the highest teachings to everyone, irrespective of their limitations. That particular devotee thought that beginners should be given preliminary exercises, along the lines prescribed by traditional Gurus. He even offered to teach these people himself and initiate them!<sup>40</sup> It is a measure of Sri Bhagavan's greatness that he said that he was not interested in handing out half-truths and lesser teachings. What mattered to him was the dissemination of the purest truth, and for that we shall be eternally grateful.

---

<sup>40</sup> An expanded version of this story, told by Kunju Swami himself, can be found in Bhagavan Sri Ramana, a Pictorial Biography, p. 74.

'Once, when Ganapati Muni was present in the hall, a group of villagers asked, "How are we to control the mind?"

In reply Bhagavan asked them to look into the origin of the mind and explained the path of self-enquiry. Soon they left and Bhagavan as usual went out for a walk.

'Remarking to the others the Muni said, "The path of Self-knowledge which Bhagavan teaches is so difficult even for the learned, and Bhagavan advocated it to the poor villagers. I doubt whether they understood it and still less whether they can practise it. If Bhagavan had advised them to practise some puja or japa, that would have been more practical."

'When this was conveyed to Bhagavan, he commented, "What to do? This is what I know. If a teaching is to be imparted according to the traditional way, one must first see whether the recipient is qualified or not. Then puja, japa or dhyana are prescribed step by step. Later the Guru says that this is all only preliminary and one has to transcend all this. Finally, the ultimate truth that 'Brahman alone is real' is revealed and to realise this the direct path of self-enquiry is to be taught. Why this roundabout process? Should we not state the ultimate truth and the direct path at the beginning itself rather than advocating many methods and rejecting them at the end?"'

Muruganar

Muruganar (1893-1973) is widely regarded as being one of the foremost devotees of Bhagavan. He was instrumental in getting Bhagavan to compose the verses that comprise Ulladu Narpadu and Upadesa Undiyar, two of Bhagavan's major philosophical poems, and he composed thousands of poems of his own that either praised Bhagavan, recorded his teachings or expressed gratitude to Bhagavan for having established him in the Self.

In his earlier life he was known as C. K. Subramania Iyer, although his parents called him Sambamurthi. Before coming to Bhagavan he was a well-respected Tamil scholar who served on a prestigious committee that was compiling the definitive Tamil dictionary. He also worked as a schoolteacher and private tutor.

It was a visit by Dandapani Swami, his father-in-law, that prompted him to go to Tiruvannamalai in September 1923. Dandapani Swami showed him Aksharamanamalai, Bhagavan's 108 verses in praise of Arunachala. Muruganar immediately recognised that Bhagavan was the Guru he had been actively seeking. He decided to pay a visit to Tiruvannamalai and see him. On the way there he composed eleven verses in the Arunachaleswara Temple. Most of the verses, addressed to Bhagavan as Siva, contained pleas for grace. Muruganar has described this first visit and the background that led up to it in two of his poetical compositions:

'Will I, an unworthy ignorant one, ever be accepted as a devotee by Lord Siva who, as the Divine Guru with the wealth of grace, showed clearly to the world the greatness of Manikkavachagar? And even if I get such a chance, will I be able to sing of the glories of his grace-showering feet in the same way as Tiruvachakam [Manikkavachagar's most famous poetical work]?'

Muruganar, sitting left, during the period he was working on the Tamil Lexicon Committee.

Like many other thoughts that arose in my mind, this thought, a long time ago, appeared and disappeared, like a flash of lightning manifesting in the sky.

Then I heard from devotees who had redeemed themselves by taking as their support the grace of the one at Tiruvannamalai, who is the embodiment of true jnana, and who shines as the flame of true tapas. When they spoke of the greatness of his grace, they melted in joy. Hearing them, I was lost in admiration and unceasing joy ... .

The compassionate Supreme One, who is endowed with jnana, then decided in his heart to be my Lord and Master.

There was in me a thirst, an intense longing to subside [into the Self], that was prompted by the thought of the divine feet, which abound in grace. So, like one who, suffering from thirst, comes across a Ganges of cold water, on an auspicious day, a golden day for my thirst, I went [to Ramana Maharshi] with eleven verses that began 'Leaving Mount Kailas ...' and met the excellent sage, the jñāna Guru, the ocean of mauna, the bestower of jñāna.

In the same way that wax melts on encountering fire, on seeing his feet my mind dissolved and lost its form. Like the calf finding its mother, my heart melted and rejoiced in his feet. The hairs on my body stood on end. Devotion surged in me like an ocean that has seen the full moon. Through the grace of chitsakti [the power inherent in consciousness], my soul was in ecstasy.

With an unsteady and quivering voice, I read the eleven verses and placed them at his feet. At that very moment he graciously looked at me with his lotus eyes. From that day on, the praises given out by my impartial tongue belonged only to him.

From the way he bestowed his grace, becoming my Lord and Master, I was completely convinced that he was Siva himself. As my new 'owner', he made my 'I' and 'mine' his own.

Even if I get submerged in the miry mud [of hell], I will not forget the mighty nobility of the bountiful bestower of grace.<sup>1</sup>

In September 1923 Bhagavan was still living in a small thatched hut that had been erected over his mother's samadhi. Muruganar felt unsure of the correct way of approaching Bhagavan, so he remained for some time outside the hut. Bhagavan solved the problem by coming outside and saying 'Enna?' ['What?']. In Tamil Nadu, this is a standard way of ascertaining what business a new visitor has.

In response to this query Muruganar began to sing the verses that had been composed by him in the temple, but emotion got the better of him. Tears welled up in his eyes and he was unable to proceed.

---

<sup>1</sup> Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, 'Origin of the work', lines 1-16, and Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, 'Tiruvandappahudi', lines 49-80.

The Power of the Presence

'Can't you read?' asked Bhagavan. 'Give it to me. I shall read it myself.'

Bhagavan then read out the poem. Up till this time Muruganar had been very particular about annotating his poems with a specific raga or melody, since it was traditional that particular metres or themes had to be sung in a particular way. After this first encounter with Bhagavan, he was never able to sing his poems again.<sup>2</sup>

Though he had clearly arrived in a state of intense devotion, this first visit did not go smoothly. B. V. Narasimhaswami interviewed Muruganar while he was researching his biography, Self-Realization. This is what Muruganar told him in February 1930:

Two or three days after my arrival I was given some medicine. I do not know what it was, but it excited me and overpowered me. I sat in front of the Maharshi and concentrated my mind on his person. After a few minutes I had a vision of brightness. It was a suffused brightness all over his body and around it. The body was, however, distinct from the surrounding light. How long it lasted I do not know, so wholly lost was I in contemplating the vision. Kunju Swami, Dandapani Swami and Arunachala Swami were present while this was going on. Maharshi then appeared to me as Christ, for what reason I cannot say, and again as Mohammed and other great souls for similarly inexplicable reasons.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> This elaboration of the first meeting was given by Muruganar to V. Ganesan, who recorded it in 'Obeisance to the Poet-saint: Muruganar'. See The Mountain Path, 1973, pp. 202-3. Verse 1074 of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai may be referring to this first meeting:

Venkata [Ramana] whose being is Bliss overflowing and immeasurable,
Came out quick to meet this slave
And far from laughing in contempt,
Took me up and made me his own.
How wonderful his grace!

<sup>3</sup> In Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, 'Ramana Deva Padikam', Muruganar

I lost my former personality during this period, for it was submerged and lost in a huge ocean wave of a new state of spirituality. I was feeling that all my experience was dream-like, vague, insubstantial, and mysterious, in spite of the feeling that I was still in the waking condition. I was obsessed by this fear that my former worldly waking state was being smothered and my former self plundered of its sense of reality and individuality. I felt that as a consequence I might be perpetually held down to this strange life in Tiruvannamalai and be forever lost to my mother whose sole support I was.

So I bawled out some words to this effect: 'Here are a band of robbers called siddhas at whose head is this Ramana Maharshi! They are all intent on capturing souls who approach them in the waking condition and rapidly charming them into this mysterious siddha's sort of life and adding them to their group! As it would not be within the power of my mother or anyone else to see me or take me back from their iron clutch, I must start off from here at once!'

I also added, looking at this bright dazzling figure of Maharshi and addressing him: 'So here I am, unable even for a few moments to endure this light. How wonderful it is that a woman, your mother, should have carried you in her womb for nine long months.'

In this high-strung state, and in this unique strain, I went on haranguing for over an hour, punctuating my remarks by repeated prostrations to Maharshi. After that I wandered about here and there with Kunju Swami and Arunachala Swami, mostly around Pali Tirtham and the Chengam Road until about 3 a.m. I felt that all attempts to escape from the ashram were futile as the whole of Tiruvannamalai was giving me the same oppressive feeling, submerging my is probably writing about these visions when he asks Bhagavan if he is Christ, the Prophet Mohammad, the Buddha or Siva. His possible identity with other great beings is also mentioned in this poem.

---

The Power of the Presence

personality. [I felt] that Tiruvannamalai and the Maharshi were coextensive and synonymous.<sup>4</sup>

A few days later, during the same trip to Tiruvannamalai, when I had no medicine to excite me, I again sat before the Maharshi and had a similar experience. Once again the figure of the Maharshi became brilliant, and my sense of personality was again submerged. Again my fears were roused that should I continue in his presence longer, I should be lost to my mother. So at midnight I hurried from the ashram into the town and spent the night in the house of one of my pupils.

In the succeeding months I came to visit on many

---

<sup>4</sup> I asked Kunju Swami what he remembered of Muruganar's first visit. He replied:

We didn't know what the problem was. He was babbling incoherently and seemed very agitated. Bhagavan asked us to keep an eye on him because he didn't look like he was capable of looking after himself. Bhagavan's darshan sometimes had a very dramatic effect on new visitors. We knew that nothing bad could happen to a visitor while he was under Bhagavan's protection, so I wasn't really alarmed by Muruganar's behaviour. He just needed someone to look after him for a few hours till he calmed down.

It is possible that the 'medicine' that Muruganar was given was ganja since there were several sadhus who congregated around Bhagavan who regularly took this drug. Bhagavan frequently expressed his disapproval of this behaviour, but it still continued on the fringes of the ashram.

Verse 339 of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai seems to refer to this dramatic first visit to Bhagavan:

To those who come to you, O Lord,
Your grace is like the ocean vast.
When I, on service bent, had reached
Your Feet, with smiling face you glanced
At me, and at that moment you
Revealed to my mind's eye
Rare visions, various, wonderful,
Never by man beheld before!

occasions. I used to listen to people's queries to the Maharshi and his replies to them. I was gradually influenced by him and my outlook on life was getting altered. After my mother died in 1924, I left my job in July 1926 and I came to Tiruvannamalai, making it my permanent residence in the middle of 1926. I have continued here ever since, and I have now written over a thousand verses about him.<sup>5</sup>

This account is so excessively self-deprecating, I can only conclude that in the final paragraph Muruganar was deliberately downplaying his experiences and accomplishments.

Muruganar made a second visit to Bhagavan about three months later and on that occasion also he had a vision of Bhagavan surrounded by light. He again had the fear that if he remained at Ramanasramam, he would become a sannyasin. Since he was still very attached to his mother and feared that she would be left without anyone to support her if he abandoned his career to live in Tiruvannamalai, he fled Tiruvannamalai after only one day and returned to Madras. It was on this visit that Bhagavan encouraged him to write poetry using the same style and subject matter that Manikkavachagar had used more than 1,000 years before. Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, one of Muruganar's major works, closely follows the format of the Tiruvachakam, Manikkavachagar's most celebrated poetry collection.<sup>6</sup>

For the next three years Muruganar was a regular visitor to Ramanasramam. He would come whenever he had free time and was so attached to being in Bhagavan's presence, on many occasions he would find it physically impossible to board the return train. He would wait on the platform in the station, watch the train leave, and then return to

---

<sup>5</sup> I discovered this account while I was cataloguing the Sri Ramanasramam archives in the early 1980s. The manuscript was in B. V. Narasimhaswami's handwriting. I doubt that Muruganar himself would have described his first days in Tiruvannamalai in this way had he been prevailed upon to write an account himself. This version was published in The Mountain Path, 1981, pp. 84-88.

<sup>6</sup> A more extensive account of Muruganar's early relationship with Bhagavan can be found in the introductory chapter of The Shining of my Lord.

The Power of the Presence

Ramanasramam. When he was asked about this, he would say that his body could not step onto the train. After this had happened a few times, Bhagavan would send someone to the station with him to force him to get into a carriage.

Though Muruganar, in the account he gave to Narasimhaswami, has little to say about his early years with Bhagavan, there is another source that adds a new dimension to the story of how he came to be with Bhagavan in Tiruvannamalai. In 1972 Muruganar's wife Meenakshi wrote a brief account of this period of her life.<sup>7</sup>

My husband was a tutor to the third Rani's mother in the Ramanathapuram palace. After my marriage he served as Tamil vidvan [pandit] in Tirumalai Nayakkar Mahal, Madurai. Then we left that place, came to Rayapuram and settled in Kollava Agraharam. My husband became a Tamil pandit in Northwick School, Rayapuram.

In the meantime my father [Dandapani Swami] took sannyasa and became one of the leading devotees of Sri Ramana Bhagavan. Later, my father went to Palani with Bhagavan's permission, constructed an ashram in South Giri Street, and lived there for some time. While he was there he came to our house in Rayapuram. During his visit he gave a copy of Aksharamanamalai to my husband. My husband went through the verses and after four days informed me that he was going to Tirukkazhu Kunram. However, instead he went straight to Tiruvannamalai.

When he saw Bhagavan, he felt that his whole body was burning. He wept and cried out, complaining of a burning sensation without knowing what it was. The attendants around Bhagavan thought that he was mad.

One attendant, Sri Ramakrishna Swami, rubbed lemon juice on his head and poured pots of water over him.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> I found this account, written in Tamil, in the Sri Ramanasramam archives. An English translation of it was published in The Mountain Path, 1981, pp. 84-88.

<sup>8</sup> This is a common village treatment for people who are believed to be insane. Annamalai Swami was given the same treatment in his village

Dandapani Swami, Muruganar's father-in-law and the man who introduced him to Bhagavan, is standing in the front, holding a stick.

Muruganar is to his right, and slightly behind him. Ramakrishna Swami is standing next to Dandapani Swami. This photo was taken in 1923, shortly after Muruganar visited Bhagavan for the first time.

He stayed there for several days doing tapas and having Bhagavan's darshan. He then returned to Madras and his job, but he had little interest in his work.

Then he began to go to Tiruvannamalai on all Saturdays and Sundays for one year. After my mother-in-law's first annual ceremony, and without informing me, he resigned his job and went to Ramanathapuram.<sup>9</sup> because the people there thought that his obsession with God was unhinging his mind. See Living by the Words of Bhagavan, pp. 12-13.

---

<sup>9</sup> The first anniversary of her death. Muruganar was very attached to his mother and delayed the renunciation of his worldly life and career until after her death. Two of Muruganar's works have dedications to his mother, and he composed a number of verses in which he implored

The Power of the Presence

My neighbours telegraphed to my brother about my problem and he came to see me. Both of us went to the school and met the headmistress who was an English lady. She said that he had resigned his job and left. I began to weep and she consoled me by saying that God would help me.

Then I went to Ramanathapuram with my brother, and Muruganar came to visit us the night we arrived. I held his feet and wept. I requested him to point out my faults, if any, that made him leave me alone. He gave me no reply. Then I went to Raghava Iyengar, an associate of Muruganar and a great Tamil scholar in the town, and told him about my troubles. Raghava talked to my husband but his words had no effect.

Shantammal (front, in white)

Then Sri Muruganar left for Tiruvannamalai and after ten days I also went there. Shantammal also came to the ashram. I narrated all my sufferings to Bhagavan and wept, and Bhagavan consoled me. I stayed in the ashram for six months. At that time the ashram was very small. Chinnaswami, Bhagavan, Ramakrishna Swami and Dandapani Swami used to cook. I helped them in the kitchen and it was a very happy time for me.

Daily Bhagavan used to give me ten verses from Muruganar's works and instructed me to recite them to him the following day. I did it regularly. Sometimes I helped Bhagavan in grinding for iddlies, and so on.

Once a week Bhagavan used to go round the hill with Kunju Swami, Dandapani Swami, Ramakrishna Swami, Bhagavan either to cure his mother's various ailments or give her Self-realisation in the same way that he had given his own mother liberation.

---

Shantammal and others. I also used to accompany them. We used to recite Aksharamanamalai during our pradakshina.

Bhagavan never allowed anyone to be idle. All disciples used to sit in meditation with closed eyes in the hall. I did not know how to meditate, and when I mentioned this to Bhagavan, he taught me how to do it. One day I came to the hall with my hair full of flowers and bowed before Bhagavan.

Shantammal saw my decorations and said, 'Your husband has become a sannyasin. Why do you dress up like this?'

After hearing this I removed the flowers and I went up to Bhagavan weeping and bowed down before him.

He noticed me and asked, 'Why did you remove all your decorations?'

I said that it was on the advice of Shantammal.

Immediately Bhagavan called Shantammal and asked, 'Why, has she no husband?<sup>10</sup> Why should she not decorate herself if she wants to? When people come to the ashram and take a ladle in their hand,<sup>11</sup> they immediately think that they are wonderful. While I was trying to bring her peace, you have hurt her heart.'

On one occasion, while others were doing meditation, I was more interested in some coffee that was due to be served.

Bhagavan noticed me, laughed and said, 'Everyone is doing meditation on the Self, but Meenakshi is doing coffee meditation'.

At that moment Saranagathi Ramaswami Iyer, who had come in a bullock cart, entered the hall with coffee and iddies and Bhagavan asked him to serve me first.

Muruganar stayed near the temple in town with Iswara

---

<sup>10</sup> Though Muruganar had left his job, his wife and his home to be with Bhagavan, he did not take sannyasa. Meenakshi had every right to behave as if she were still married. Wives of sannyasins would be expected to behave as if they were widowed and not wear flowers or jewellery.

<sup>11</sup> Shantammal was one of a group of brahmin widows who did most of the cooking in the ashram in the 1920s, 30s and 40s.

Muruganar is sitting front right. Ramakrishna Swami is sitting behind him. Viswanatha Swami is sitting on the left on the back row.

Swamigal and Gopal Rao. They used to go begging for their food at noon. Muruganar used to sit alone in the Subramaniya temple in the evening.

One evening, acting on Shantammal's advice, I caught hold of Muruganar's feet and asked, 'What mistake have I done? Why did you leave? What will be my future?'

In response he opened neither his mouth nor his eyes.

Soon after this incident someone brought a piece of verse to the hall and put it before Bhagavan.

Bhagavan wanted Muruganar to read it and said, 'Muruganar has been absent for the last two days. What is the reason?'

In response to this I went to Bhagavan and told him what I did at the temple on Shantammal's advice.

Bhagavan got angry with me and said, 'Why did you act like that on that woman's advice? You see, while he was here, you could see your husband. But now he has disappeared, what will you do? Hereafter, don't take others' advice and don't give trouble to Muruganar.'

Then Bhagavan asked Viswanatha Swami and Ramakrishna Swami to search for Muruganar and bring him back. They found him in Skandashram and brought him back to the ashram, telling him that Meenakshi had gone to her village. He came and sat by the side of Bhagavan and I went before Bhagavan and did namaskaram. Then Bhagavan asked Muruganar why he had run away instead of advising me to do some meditation. Muruganar remained silent.

Bhagavan picked up a book. I was sitting in a corner and he called to me to come near him.

‘Meenakshi, come here. There is a story in this book. I shall read it to you. Listen. Once a husband and wife lived happily for some time. One day her husband disappeared without telling anyone. Many years passed but she could not find him. Eventually she joined a hospital as a nurse. In the same hospital her husband was working as head compounder, but they did not recognise each other. After some time they became close friends and the nurse became pregnant. When her mother came to help her, he saw her and realised that his present wife was the same one whom he had earlier deserted.’

After finishing the story Bhagavan asked, ‘Why don’t you act like her?’ and everyone in the hall laughed, including me.

One day all the devotees were sitting in the hall. I was in tears again.

Bhagavan asked me, ‘Why are you crying again? Did somebody tease you?’

I said, ‘No one talked against me, but I thought of my miserable life and the tears just came.’

Bhagavan said, ‘Why don’t you take my advice. What is there in the family life? See, your father has ten children, but they are not helping him. I am always here with you. Nothing will happen. Don’t worry.’

In this way Bhagavan consoled me.

Then he said, ‘Go only to the house where you are called

The Power of the Presence

affectionately “Meenakshi”. The ashram will take care of you.’<sup>12</sup>

Another day he called me ‘Meenakshi’ and gave me ten verses by Muruganar to memorise. In these verses he describes Bhagavan as his bridegroom with Muruganar being his bride. He complains that Bhagavan has left the bride in the streets after marriage without proper care.<sup>13</sup>

One verse says, ‘You were once with me, my wedded Lord, but now for a long time you have abandoned me. And if I complain, you call our old friendship a dream that I had dreamt.’

In the version given to me Bhagavan changed the last line, replacing the name Ramana with Muruga.

Then he asked me to recite these verses in the hall in the evening while Muruganar was there.

I sang these ten verses in the hall while Muruganar was sitting by the side of Bhagavan.

---

<sup>12</sup> I discussed Meenakshi’s account with Professor K. Swaminathan, then vice-president of the Delhi Ramana Kendra, in 1980. At that time Professor Swaminathan was bringing out Muruganar’s works in Tamil, with financial assistance from the Government of India. He was also translating Muruganar’s poems for various Ramanasramam publications. He knew about this promise that had been made by Bhagavan and had consequently arranged for the Delhi Kendra to provide a pension for Meenakshi for as long as she lived.

<sup>13</sup> Verse 873 of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai:

Then you and I were one alone,
Both one, forever one,
But then, like some carefree vagabond
Incapable of constant love,
You left me in the street for folk
To laugh and jeer at!
If now I took the liberty
To speak of it, you’d answer straight
That it was but a dream we dreamed!
How can this woman comprehend
Your state mysterious, Ramana, Master of maya, God above!

Muruganar

Bhagavan then told Muruganar, 'I have not left you in the streets, but you have left Meenakshi in the streets'.

Muruganar got up laughing, but Bhagavan asked him to give a reply before getting up, but he went away without saying anything.<sup>14</sup>

Then Bhagavan said, 'I tried in so many ways. It is of no use. God alone will look after you.'

Bhagavan was very kind to me. His grace must be with me forever.

Bhagavan's attempts to reunite Muruganar and Meenakshi were unsuccessful. Muruganar remained with Bhagavan at Ramanasramam and never went back to being a householder with his wife. Though he never took sannyasa, Muruganar lived the rest of his life as a sadhu and daily went to Tiruvannamalai to beg for his food.

This insistence on begging was one of the most noticeable aspects of his lifestyle. In the final years of his life, when he lived in Ramanasramam and was venerated by all the devotees who lived there, he still insisted on going for bhiksha, but instead of begging on the streets of Tiruvannamalai, he would 'beg' at the kitchen door of the Ramanasramam dining room. He would hold out the cloth he wrapped round his shoulders, and one of the kitchen workers would put food into it.

After an initial period of residence in the Arunachaleswara Temple, Muruganar moved to Palakottu, the sadhu colony adjacent to Ramanasramam. The following story dates from this period:

Bhagavan used to say that begging for alms was a good antidote for the ego. Muruganar laid great stress on purity. His clothes, including the ones used for bhiksha, would be spotlessly clean. Before eating the food brought by alms, Muruganar would keep washing his hands and feet with sand in the tank at Palakottu. This would take quite a while. Sometimes the

---

<sup>14</sup> According to Kanakamma (Ramana's Muruganar, p. 38) Bhagavan remarked, before Muruganar had had a chance to leave the hall, 'Why do you leave the place just because it is sung as "Muruga Mayavan"? Then should I not follow suit when it is sung as "Ramana Mayavan"?'

The Power of the Presence

monkeys which abounded there at that time would eat his food and he would have to go hungry. Noticing this predicament of Muruganar, Sabapathy Pillai, the priest of the Ganesh Temple there, invited Muruganar to stay with him and persuaded him to do so.<sup>15</sup>

The Palakottu tank in the 1940s. The Ganesh shrine can be seen in the top right corner of the photo.

Muruganar's obsession with cleanliness was legendary. One of his students, Padma Venkataraman, has noted that he would use four full buckets of water just to wash his hands, feet and teeth.<sup>16</sup> The same attitude was manifested when he was asked to take charge, temporarily, of the pujas in the Mother's samadhi.

He would be rubbing the lingam so that there would not be any trace of oil from the abhishekam ... . Next, he would endlessly clean the area.

While watching him do the worship Bhagavan humorously

<sup>15</sup> Ramana's Muruganar, p. 8.

<sup>16</sup> Ramana's Muruganar, p. 49.

Muruganar

remarked, 'The way you are rubbing the lingam, it would wear away in no time. The lingam itself would disappear!'<sup>17</sup>

Though Bhagavan had openly criticised him for the way he was treating his wife Meenakshi,<sup>18</sup> Bhagavan did recognise that Muruganar was an advanced devotee who was ready for an experience of the Self. At some point – Muruganar never mentions exactly when, but it is assumed to be soon after his arrival in Tiruvannamalai – Bhagavan answered Muruganar's pleas for grace by directing his divine look at him. Under Bhagavan's penetrating gaze Muruganar lost his worldly delusions and found himself restored to his natural state of Self-awareness. As Muruganar wrote many years later, 'He forgave me my misdeeds and made good my imperfections'.<sup>19</sup>

Muruganar has described the spiritual dimension of this event in thousands of his verses, but in remarkably few of them does he give any hint of the physical circumstances in which this momentous encounter took place.<sup>20</sup> In verse 255 of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai

---

<sup>17</sup> Ramana's Muruganar, p. 30.

<sup>18</sup> When Muruganar was once cutting spinach with Bhagavan in the kitchen, he managed to do the job so badly, Bhagavan remarked, 'The way you have cut the vegetables is no better than the way you managed your house'.

Soon afterwards Muruganar wrote the following verse (Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, v. 863) and gave it to Bhagavan:

Why are you, O Ramana,
A naked beggar crying out
For alms and roaming here and there?
Why not seek the company
Of a nice young lady and so start Straightway a decent household life?

Muruganar, writing in jest, thought that Bhagavan's extreme fastidiousness in the kitchen was more suitable to a married householder than a 'naked beggar'. Bhagavan himself roared with laughter when he was shown the verse. (Ramana's Muruganar, p. 23.)

<sup>19</sup> Sri Ramana Anubhuti, v. 233.

<sup>20</sup> There are many accounts of Muruganar's life that state that this awakening took place on the day that he first met Bhagavan. In the light

The Power of the Presence

Muruganar does mention that it took place in Palakottu. Elsewhere in the same work, in a poem entitled 'Keerti Tiruvahaval', there is a brief, tantalising description of what happened on that decisive occasion:

He took me to the forest with him on the pretext of plucking leaves to make leaf-plates. There, with great delight, he destroyed my mind's restlessness by bestowing his glance on me. In the middle of the night he subdued my divided individual consciousness, granting me the experience of the undivided reality.

Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai

In the lines from 'Tiruvandappahudi' that were cited earlier (see footnote one and its associated text) Muruganar stated that he came to Bhagavan with a strong desire to write poetry that praised him in the same way that Manikkavachagar had sung songs praising his own Guru more than a thousand years before. Bhagavan encouraged Muruganar to pursue this ambition. During the first ten years of his association with Bhagavan, Muruganar wrote many verses that extolled the greatness of Bhagavan, adopting the style and format that Manikkavachagar had used in his classic anthology, Tiruvachakam.<sup>21</sup> When the first edition of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai was published in 1933, it was publicly read in the hall where Bhagavan resided, with all those present, including Bhagavan, taking turns to read out portions of the text. Sometime later, when Bhagavan heard a devotee making a disparaging comment about Muruganar, he responded by saying, 'The very day that Sannidhi Murai ... came out, Muruganar became one among the very foremost of devotees'.<sup>22</sup> of Muruganar's own account, which I have already given, I find this point of view unsupportable. Muruganar's description of his first visit is not the account of a man who has been graced by an experience of the Self.

---

<sup>21</sup> More detailed accounts of the genesis of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai (Testament to Sri Ramana's Presence) can be found in the introductions to Ramana Puranam (The Great Story of Ramana) and The Shining of my Lord.

<sup>22</sup> See Michael James' article in Ramana's Muruganar (p. 93) for more

The remainder of this chapter will comprise excerpts from Muruganar's writings. He was an extraordinarily prolific author, composing about 25,000 verses on Bhagavan between 1923 and 1973, when he finally passed away at Ramanasramam. All of this poetry either praises Bhagavan, expresses gratitude for the experience he has bestowed on Muruganar, or records his teaching.

In the first two excerpts from Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai Muruganar provides additional information about his spiritual development and the early meetings he had with Bhagavan.

Over many yugas I went repeatedly through the eighty-four lakh forms of life<sup>23</sup> in which, with the indescribable, intense suffering of embodied existence, I longed for the multifarious miseries that itch and eat one away. Moving up the many steps [of animate life forms] in the ordained manner, I came to a human birth, a birth fit for attaining the clarity of jnana. Though I had such a birth, and though my mind had love towards the Supreme, the nature of the Supreme was not realised. I came to the conclusion that, since the entity known as God might be either real or an unreal imagination, what really conferred benefit on my soul was good conduct and character. Convinced of this, I practised [righteous] behaviour, but though I tried, I frequently failed.

The Supreme Being Siva, having no body-delusion, abides as the real nature of one's own Self. Shining within the intellect, illuminating it, it cannot be reached by those indulging in fallacious arguments. Tolerating my immature conduct and treating me as if I had attained freedom from impurities, [Siva] considered admitting me to the group of his companions.<sup>24</sup>

In the same way that a hunter catches a wild deer by showing a tame one [as a decoy], He [Siva] displays a body to catch [embodied] souls. Since I regarded myself as a form, in order not information on the background and context of this remark.

---

<sup>23</sup> There is a Hindu tradition that souls have to pass through 8.4 million births, each in a different species, before they can attain a human birth. A yuga is a period of millions of years.

<sup>24</sup> In Saivism this is a descriptive way of saying 'giving liberation'.

The Power of the Presence

to frighten me [Sadasiva] manifested within the unconditioned reality through the power of very pure maya ...<sup>25</sup>

He became the incomparable sage at Arunachala, which is praised even by the gods. Like the worm that becomes a wasp on being stung by a wasp, through his mere presence and glance my 'I' and 'mine' were destroyed. Seeing me as his own Self, he enabled me to experience myself as enduring, pure being-consciousness. With my body and mind absent, I became full of Self. This is how he bestowed his grace on this pitiable one.

Muruganar sitting next to Bhagavan in the 1920s. Ramakrishna Swami is to his right.

Without belittling this by thinking that this rare gesture was an ordinary one, I took his feet as my sole aim, becoming their inseparable shadow. Thinking of his grace, the mind softened and melted. I became like a madman. Tears were flowing, the body was trembling, thought and speech were obstructed. Love surged and destroyed the ego. Sweat was trickling, and there was horripilation. The mind and senses became one and totally surrendered. With all my actions gone, all activities are now Siva's. He established me in this state of service to the Lord.

<sup>25</sup> Bhagavan sometimes said that the form of the Guru is illusory. He compared it to a lion that appears in an elephant's dream. The shock of the appearance wakes the elephant up, at which point it realises that the form of the lion was merely a mental projection.

Obeisance to my Lord who wears the crescent moon on his head and who redeemed me in this way ... . You did not reject me, saying that I was a vile, unworthy person who has fallen from his state, like hair that has fallen from the head. Instead, you came of your own accord, casting the net of your lotus eyes. In the sight of many scholars who were well versed in the Vedas,<sup>26</sup> which are the impeccable and indestructible truth, you bestowed your benign glance and established me in the unmoving state.

You are the unmoving one; you are the compassionate one; you are the skilful Lord of true knowledge; you are the medicine for the disease of birth that causes great misery. To poor me, who was totally lost by not seeking consciousness, you are like the store laid down to be used in times of adversity. You are the God who saved me from the mouth of the crocodile, my past karma.<sup>27</sup>

Human beings wallow in samsara, regarding themselves as forms, without realising the rarity of the grace-embodied form of the Sadguru.<sup>28</sup> Though this form has manifested to destroy the mass of their dark vasanas, [those] who are under the spell of the 'I am the body' delusion, through their simple-minded view, which

<sup>26</sup> This probably refers to Ganapati Muni and his disciples, since members of this group were regular visitors to Bhagavan during this period.

<sup>27</sup> Selected extracts from 'Potri Tiruvahaval', lines 1-110. The ahaval metrical form in which this poem was composed does not have separate verses. The lines have been translated here in the form of a continuous prose account. The next excerpt was also composed in the ahaval format and has been treated in the same way.

<sup>28</sup> The Sadguru is the Guru who is established as being (sat) and who has the ability to reveal this state to those who would otherwise be unaware of it.

The Power of the Presence

is prompted by ignorance, extend the same notion ['he is a body'] to the Sadguru.

If, through their immaturity, they behave in this way, then, like those who do not get their winnowing completed when the wind is blowing, they will, in the end, regret and lament over their folly. In order that they redeem themselves by knowing the Sadguru's real nature, and prompted by my friendship towards them, I will sing of the real nature of Ramana, which was revealed to me through his cool compassion.

The Lord of Arunachala, which is solidified consciousness, is Ramana, a delight to my mind. In him innumerable special attributes appear together, but since he does not identify with any of them, he is therefore declared to be the primal, unmanifest reality.

He is more minute than an atom, but he will not bow in reverence or extol delightfully anything as separate from him. In his godliness he is greater than a mountain. Even so, to those who accept this view and bow to him, he will not utter words of blessings. Accordingly, he who has the wealth that is not associated with form and attribute can neither be called great nor small.

In addition, he shines within all beings as consciousness, but however much and however hard one may exert one's thoughts, he can never be experienced in the mind. What a wonder! He who is the embodiment of tapas will shine of his own accord if one becomes calm and still. Consequently, he whose nature is wonderful and whose form is the space of consciousness is neither difficult nor easy to know.

Similarly, it is difficult to say whether or not he has prarabdha, whether he has form or is formless, whether he is masculine, feminine or neuter, knowledge or ignorance, one or many, atomic or cosmic, Self or non-Self, joy or misery. So, it is extremely difficult to define his nature, his actions, his ways and their propriety.

In essence, Ramana's real nature defies definition.<sup>29</sup>

---

<sup>29</sup> Swarupa Tiruvahaval. In the first edition of Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai (1933) this was the opening poem. In later editions the first poem was Ramana Puranam, a work that Bhagavan himself helped Muruganar to write. In all the later editions Swarupa Tiruvahaval is the second poem.

Muruganar

Muruganar had come to Bhagavan pleading for grace and salvation. Bhagavan's initial response was to tell him to be still and quiet. This teaching was brought out in a Sri Ramana Sannidhi poem that Muruganar composed entitled 'Trai Pani Nitral', 'Steadfastness in Service'.

O happy one, whichever way I went
I heard your praise and surrendered to your feet my body, wealth<sup>30</sup> and life.
I cried out, 'Ocean of virtue, mountain-high, show me the way to happiness!'
Ramana the just, the majestic, said, 'Stand still. Stay where you are.'

By neither digging nor soaring could Vishnu or Brahma find you,<sup>31</sup> whereas I, trudging towards diverse goals, was worn thin.
I cried out, 'Tell me how to merge in the feet which are beyond the knowledge of life!'

---

<sup>30</sup> Before settling at Sri Ramanasramam, Muruganar sold most of his personal and household belongings and donated the proceeds to the ashram.

<sup>31</sup> This is a reference to the principal Arunachala myth. Vishnu and Brahma were quarrelling about who was the greater. Siva intervened and manifested himself as an infinitely long column of light. He told the two gods that whichever of them could find an end to the column would be deemed to be the greater of the two. Brahma took the form of a swan and tried to fly to the top. Vishnu took the form of a boar and tried to dig his way to the bottom. Neither was successful and both eventually had to admit that Siva was greater than either of them. After they had admitted defeat, Siva was requested to appear, for the benefit of devotees, in a form that was less dazzling. He agreed and manifested as the mountain of Arunachala. The Arunachala Mahatmyam states that Siva first appeared as the mountain of Arunachala on Ardhra Darshanam, a midwinter festival that traditionally commemorates a famous manifestation of Siva in Chidambaram.

The Power of the Presence

Ramana, pure and secure, said,
'Be still. Rest as you are.'

Passing, passing through various births, driven on and on by the force of karma,
I cried, 'Show me the way, my friend, my Master!
Show me the way to reach you!'
Ramana, the Lord of wisdom and welfare, replied,
'Don't be angry, don't be glad.
Gather your mind to oneness and be guided by the grace of the Lord.'

As a picture spreading on a cinema screen,
I suffered and cried out,
'Tell me how to become the unmoving screen on which the pictures appear!'
Ramana, the Master of wisdom, said,
'Like a flame in a pitcher, burn steadily and brightly in the grace of the Lord.
Be still. Fulfil his will.'

I cried out, 'Lord and Master, tell me how to make good deeds prevail against deluding evil deeds!'
My dear father, my Ramana, said,
'Stand untroubled in the centre.
Move only as you may be moved by the grace of the Lord.'

I cried out, 'Mighty Master of works, creating, preserving, destroying, tell me the way to salvation!'
Ramana, the wise and virtuous one replied,
'Watch word and thought and walk as you are guided by the grace of the Lord who dwells in the lotus of your Heart'.

I cried out, 'How to end the strong inveterate deeds that torment me and force me back into the torrid current of births!'
Ramana, best and brightest of teachers, answered, 'Walking the straight path fixed of old, join and be enjoined by the grace of the Lord of joyous awareness'.

I cried out, 'O rain cloud pregnant with compassion!
Teach me fully the trick of escaping alive from the flood of births.'
Ramana, Lord of wisdom and welfare, said,
'Neither like nor loathe the true or the false.
Stand in the centre and be impelled by the grace of the Lord.'

I cried out, 'All forms I see are forms of you.
As none of the gods know you aright, tell me decisively what to do.'
Ramana, Lord of wisdom and welfare, replied,
'There is a way to escape the hungry current of births, and to reach the shore and be safe.
Join and be one with the grace of the Lord.'

I cried out, 'Best of Masters! You who shone in the kurunda tree's cool shade to teach your devotee from Vadavur!<sup>32</sup> Fully and clearly lay bare to me the secret of Self-knowledge.'

---

<sup>32</sup> This is a reference to Manikkavachagar whose home town was Vadavur. Siva appeared to Manikkavachagar under a kurunda tree, accepted him as his disciple, looked at him, and through his divine gaze established him in the Self.

The Power of the Presence

Replied Ramana, my father, my king, 'Be as you are, your Self!'<sup>33</sup>

Sri Guru Ramana Prasadam

In 1960 a collection of Muruganar's verses entitled Sri Ramana Anubhuti, Volume One was published by Ramanapadananda. Muruganar subsequently made many revisions to the published version, but these were not incorporated into the book until it was reprinted in Tamil in 2004 under the new title Sri Guru Ramana Prasadam. The following selection of verses have been taken from Robert Butler's English translation of the 2004 edition. The original verse numbers can be found in the 'Sources' section at the end of the book.

At the feet of my Lord

- 1 The direct experience of the one Self engulfed me in its radiance, banishing the misery of birth that cloaked my soul in darkness. There then remained in my consciousness no landmark whatsoever other than my teacher's feet – the infinite sky of his grace – subjecting me to their gracious rule and dispelling my fears.
- 2 When the light of his holy feet, that tranquil shore that is so hard to reach, wondrously caused my heart to blossom, the ghostly dance of the 'I' with its wild antics subsided in the state of mauna, an existence whose glorious nature is impossible to describe.
- 3 The Lord bestowed upon me the grace of his great and glorious feet, so that I experienced the happiness of inner stillness. As those feet spread their glorious rays of truth within my heart, delusion's obscuring cloak fell away and I entered the state of peace.

---

<sup>33</sup> Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, vv. 967-76.

- 4     Slaying the rutting elephant of my ego-mind, he brought me to the state of final liberation, whose nature is delight. He graciously fed me on the honeyed essence of his holy feet so that the burning pangs of my soul's hunger and thirst faded and disappeared.
- 5     He caused me to experience the contentment that is mauna, the bliss of his divine grace, as the ambrosial expanse within the heart. He proffered me his holy feet, and with them the eternal truth of the Self. I am left without even the power of thought to reflect upon this.
- 6     Showing me the light of his holy feet – being-consciousness – he drove out and destroyed the ruinous ignorance which, like dense darkness, defiled my soul with its corruption. Revealing to me in all its clarity the truth whose nature is liberation, he joyfully filled my heart with the bliss of his profound peace.
- 7     I have ended the confusion of my bewildered suffering mind. A lowly cur, I have merged with the gracious feet of my Master. In the surging brilliance of his divine wisdom's splendour, the broad ocean of deadly desires has disappeared completely.
- 8     When I became united with the feet of the Sadguru, my worldly ties were cut away through the practice of absorption in his abiding Selfhood, with no longer any need to acquire empirical knowledge. The lofty knowledge of Sivam<sup>34</sup> ripened within me as the vast supreme.
- 9     An ocean of compassion, he took pity on this poor ignorant fool and through his grace, cleansing the evil from my

---

<sup>34</sup> Sivam is a term that appears frequently in Muruganar's writings. It denotes the consciousness of Siva, rather than the deity. As such it is another synonym for the Self.

The Power of the Presence

heart, he established the supreme reality there. Even the final cataclysm at the universe's end could not dislodge his radiant feet from that place.

Union with my Lord

- 10 As the glory of his non-dual state shone forth in the deep absorption of mauna, which reality's perfect light illumined, I became one with the Lord who embraced me in his consciousness. I gained the greatest reward of all – to dwell in final bliss, inseparable from him.
- 11 The Lord filled me with the radiance of his own Self, established within my heart, so that I was left quite without the power of thought. For me there is neither union with him, nor separation from him. Such is the nature of the profound wisdom that exists as my own nature.
- 12 My Master taught me that my own nature is not different from that of our Father, Lord Siva, the Self that shines miraculously within the heart. And since my Master too is that same Father, in my understanding all became united as the one Self such that there was no longer any difference between us.
- 13 Bidding me behold and embrace him without a second's delay, my Lord and Master became inwardly one with me, absorbing me into the great ocean of his own Self. The realisation that consists in the merging of my consciousness through grace with that Self was established within me as my own inalienable nature.
- 14 Through the forgetfulness [pramada] that arose through the error of failing to enquire what was truly real, I revelled in the illusory existence of the physical body. But the Lord, through his glance of grace, united with my consciousness, and brought me into harmony with true existence, the fullness of the open sky [of the Self].

- 15 Abandoning totally any other refuge or support, I have placed myself at the feet of my Sadguru, who lavishes upon me more, much more, than a mother's love. And so, as my false ego-based awareness that wandered lost amidst the world's objective phenomena became absorbed in his Self-nature and disappeared, I became merged into the all-encompassing fullness of his grace.
- 16 Attaining a vision beyond the reach of sight and an awareness more subtle than the tiniest atom, I have become established in the reality of the Self that shines unaffected by anything else. And thus my mind has merged with the supreme in which there is no going, no coming, no connection with anything whatsoever. Seeing itself in all that is, it pervades all things in fullness, lacking nothing.

Experiencing the Self

- 17 In the shining forth of my own Self, bondage and liberation disappeared, being revealed as mere concepts, the sport of wondrous maya. Mind, will and intellect became clear, free of the ghost-like ego, and merged with grace, the supreme consciousness.
- 18 Through the glorious victory that is the experience of jnana, the confusion caused by the worldly bondage that marred my existence fell away entirely. Then indeed did a tide of deep peace that my heart could not contain well up and spread within me. As the flood grew higher, desire's thirst was quenched at last.
- 19 To remain with the mind destroyed through dedication to the Lord is one's glorious natural state, the reality of the Self. In that state of delight that is the company of the Guru's holy feet there exists nothing else to excite my desire other than him.

The Power of the Presence

- 20 Dwelling in the thought-free state of mauna, I experienced jnana in all its clarity, and in the dawn of the Real I entered a new life filled with tranquility. Abiding as my own Self – the state of reality that is the absolute of absolutes, beyond bondage and liberation – I became immersed in its profound peace.

The transforming gaze of my Guru

- 21 Through his gaze he bathed me in the rising flood of his grace, revealing to me the glory of the Self, so that the stain of my imprisoned soul's defilement was washed away. Bringing my existence to ample fulfilment by restoring it to its true nature, he has become one with me, dwelling within my heart and filling me with his light.
- 22 Through his gaze that graciously bestows the jnana that cuts away birth – the irresistible delusion of maya – the Lord, rebuking and destroying my ghost-like ego and bringing me to salvation, conferred upon me the glorious experience of peace that is free of all confusion.
- 23 I was blighted like a useless corpse, bereft of life and decaying, with no worthwhile goal to aim for, until the gaze of the unique Master granted me his grace and engendered in my heart the realisation of the Self, the intangible beacon of consciousness.
- 24 I was bound for destruction through my disastrous attachment to the world's illusory reality, until, under my fair Lord's gracious gaze, my understanding was flooded with the delightful experience of Lord Siva's bliss. I entered a new life in the boundless realm of mauna, the supreme reality.
- 25 As the dark prison of mental bondage crumbled and disappeared, I became his servant, finding joyous life in the open sky of his ambrosial grace. The knot that locked my consciousness to the physical body was sundered by the bright sword of my Master's glance and was no more.

- 26 Subduing me and bringing me under his control, he drew my consciousness to himself with the irresistible magnet of his grace. From the profound depths of his mauna, his gracious glance cleaved the knot of my ego's ruinous cravings in an instant. How great is the power of his piercing gaze!
- 27 Through the grace-bestowing gaze of the Lord, of which I am totally unworthy, the miraculous and wonderful magic trick of the world's illusion fell away. As both bondage and liberation faded like a daydream, I merged into the state of the Self, which is my own radiant nature.
- 28 Freeing myself from the confusion of desire's delusion, the path that leads to the womb, I travelled the path whose mark is the mauna taught me by the Sadguru's gaze. Perceiving and attaining the peaceful state that is free of all affliction, I merged with the delightful state of grace, the inner understanding that is beyond compare.
- 29 I was a learned fool. My flawed mind knew nothing until I came to dwell with him whose glance filled my heart with the light of awareness. Dwelling in that gracious state of peace whose nature is mauna, so hard to gain and know, I entered into union with the deathless state of the knowledge of reality.
- 30 Through his captivating gaze that is filled with the harmonious joy of the unalloyed grace whose nature is impossible to conceive, the Lord bestowed his sweetness upon me like divine nectar, sweet to the taste, such that my heart softened and melted as he ruled me through a consciousness whose nature is love.
- 31 Bestowing upon me through his compassionate glance his wisdom, like a diamond, sharp and bright, my Lord, Guru Ramana, graciously accepted my surrender. And as the black cloud of ruinous self-delusion, which wore my body's form as a cloak, melted away, I perceived the precious jewel of my own Self.

The Power of the Presence

The words of my Master

- 32 To those who take as their goal the holy utterances of the Guru – in whom the flame of the Self illuminates the supreme reality – those sacred words are the only truth, and nothing can stand comparison with them.
- 33 The word of the Lord was not merely my one staff and support as the wise have described it. Because it brought me certitude, completely removing my deluded mind's confusion, it itself became the experience of the state that is replete with the unalterable truth of liberation.
- 34 Through the light of the enquiry of jnana [jnana vichara], which is true spiritual practice, and through the precious words of my teacher, who is established in the state of mauna wherein liberation has its origin, I have merged with the absolute fullness of his grace, an existence like sweetest ambrosia, the eternal non-dual experience of Sivam.

Experiencing true love

- 35 There was no good in me. I was no better than a dog. But through intense longing for my Lord my heart was suffused with love. As the suffering born of the illusion of separateness abated, the deep peace of boundless realisation shone forth, graciously bestowing the wisdom of the Self.
- 36 When I lost myself to the power of Sivam that impels me towards itself, totally eliminating the bondage of my deluded mind, an authentic existence lived in true awareness came sharply into focus, enabling me to experience a love in which I myself was that glorious Sivam that shines within the heart as the life of life itself.

- 37 Henceforth for me there is only bliss and no sorrow. Now that I have experienced love at my good Lord's gracious feet, the desires which attended that illusory existence, lived on the level of the flawed and untrustworthy mind, have ceased and the supreme has merged with me as my own essential existence.
- 38 He is the Lord, so deserving of devotion, in whom lofty jnana is embodied, and through whose nature I attained an awareness that is the clear bright and unadulterated expression of his love. It was that loving awareness that opened up my heart, subduing the defilement of my inherited propensities so that they grew weak and disappeared, eradicating the fear and shame arising from living as one bound to the body.
- 39 As love for my master grew to fill my consciousness, the blissful realisation of Lord Siva, like sweetest ambrosia, swept me up in its flood. Then, shining brightly, the state of liberation, which is to dwell firmly established in that same true awareness, became complete within my heart.
- 40 Transporting me into a realm of pure bliss, the vision of the authentic Self expanded within my heart and I attained the state of grace whose essence is love. Then, in the state of mauna, bliss and love merged together into realisation of the one true reality, the consciousness bestowed in grace that is the experience of Lord Siva.

The grace of my Master

- 41 He who nurtures all things within his own Self through the power of his consciousness eclipsed my own self's firefly glimmer with the blazing sun of his grace. The illusory world of the senses, created by the lustful mind's teeming desires, disappeared completely. As I came to dwell at my spiritual centre, a state of equanimity reigned within my heart.

The Power of the Presence

- 42 Because of the poverty of mind in which I wandered steeped in dark ignorance, I showed disrespect to the Lord, claiming that there was no grace in him. How ashamed I felt when, through his gaze that graciously bestowed the experience of the Self, jnana, I realised that he was the very form of grace itself!
- 43 Supremely blissful, bestowing the grace that is jnana, the Lord, in the form of being-consciousness, drove out completely the ignominious delusion binding my soul and revealed to me the truth of myself. Then, in the lofty state of mauna, in pure awareness, free of the ego's petty thoughts, my form dissolved into the absolute freedom of final liberation.
- 44 Even as I grieved over my own lack of worth, he revealed to me the infinite heaven of his grace, purifying me with his limitless and all-pervading light. The delusion of the ego that decries itself saying, 'Poor wretch that I am!' disappeared, and in that clear awareness my existence became one with Lord Siva.
- 45 In this mean hovel of a body I came to know clearly the true reality through my Lord's grace, so that poor and helpless as I was, I became enriched and my life prospered. It was like being shown an inexhaustible treasure buried inside a lowly hut.
- 46 It is ruinous ignorance that causes the 'I'-sense of the treacherous ego to rise up within my heart, separate from the supreme which alone exists. And it is that same ignorance that was extinguished through his grace when the sparkling crystal clear torrent of pure consciousness which is his own Self flooded my being.

- 47 Devoid of all capacity for jnana as I was, he revealed to me in grace the true realisation of his own Self, dwelling within me as the 'I' sense. Without even for an instant becoming separated from the absolute state of reality where nothing is lacking, joyfully he made himself my Master.
- 48 Through my deep yearning I realised him. As a life of divine grace, true contentment, flourished within my heart, he established me in the blessed state of absorption in pure consciousness, and supreme bliss mingled with my mind becoming [my own] nature.

The individual 'I' and the real 'I'

- 49 That which manifests as day and night, as waking and sleep, as the witness that perceives these things, is the true 'I' that shines as pure consciousness.
- 50 That in which we are caught up as in a dream, that manifests as time and space, that is the cause that manifests these effects, is the true 'I' that shines as pure consciousness.
- 51 That which dwells within all that is, that through which awareness itself becomes aware, that which exists in each thing as its individual nature, is the true 'I' that shines as pure consciousness.
- 52 The nature of my realisation was such that the 'I' that asserts its own reality was revealed as false and disappeared, but not the 'I' that is the unique, pure, non-dual Self that exists permeating all things equally.
- 53 I was wandering bewildered in the mind's deluded labyrinth of dreams, rushing hither and thither, desiring one thing then another, until the fullness of grace, the radiant consciousness that is the welling up of the bliss of Lord Siva, suffused my soul abiding as my 'I', and I became stillness itself.

The Power of the Presence

- 54 The confusion of the senses ended and the world's illusion was dispelled as grace's bright sun rose, absorbing me in itself and obliterating all distinctions. And as I entered the light of a life lived in the mauna of the glorious non-dual state, the 'I' and all that arises from it subsided and dissolved away.
- 55 He caused a flower of light to unfold in the state of pure consciousness, so that the disastrous error of a body-bound ego faded. That radiance grew ever brighter with my love until I realised the flawless knowledge of the Self manifesting as the unbroken awareness 'I-I' within my heart.

The transformative power of my Guru

- 56 As the light of truth that is Guru-consciousness [Guru-bodha] became ever more intense, there no longer remained any awareness of difference within my heart. As I became a prey to him, I was submerged in mauna, a state of knowing that is free of the mind's inherited propensities. I attained the abiding condition in which my existence was extinguished in him.
- 57 The Lord himself, he who dwells within, graciously imbued me with his teaching, revealing to me my own true nature as the Self. Through that knowledge I was absorbed into the clear light of Lord Siva's peace, pure and harmonious, leaving behind the deadly affliction of worldly attachments.
- 58 Through his gracious teaching he engendered in my consciousness the infinite fulfilment of authentic being, free of the mental imagination that clouded my mind with delusion. And thus in mauna the river of my soul ran true at last, filled with the waters of the experience of the supreme, ineffable Lord Siva.
- 59 Through the medium of his unique unspoken word, the knot within my heart was severed and destroyed, so that my spirit became separate from the illusory body that surrounded it, giving way to the overflowing expanse of reality.

- 60 He became my very soul, the supreme Lord, the flawless Brahman, the life of all that is. He is the intensely radiant jewel of the Self who, as the sun of perfect knowledge, transformed my impure soul into a perfected soul.
- 61 He revealed to me the supreme transcendent reality so that I came to dwell in mauna at his feet, bathing again and again in the sacred waters of divine awareness until my heart was pure and refreshed. Supreme bliss welled up within me as all my bitter suffering came to an end.

Guru Vachaka Kovai
(A Garland of the Guru's Sayings)

In the late 1920s Muruganar began to record the verbal teachings that Bhagavan was giving out to visitors and devotees. These upadesas were primarily written down by Muruganar in the form of four-line Tamil verses. Bhagavan was shown the verses soon after they had been composed, and if necessary he would make suggestions on how they should be changed to more accurately reflect his teachings. When about eight hundred of these verses had been collected, Bhagavan asked Sadhu Natanananda to arrange them thematically so that they could be published. A proof copy of the proposed book was shown to Bhagavan, who then made substantial revisions to the text. The final version, which first appeared in 1939, is the most authoritative and detailed collection of Bhagavan's spoken teachings.<sup>35</sup>

The following selection of verses on the nature and role of the Guru has been assembled from different sections of the text. The original verse

---

<sup>35</sup> A detailed account of how the book came to be written, and Bhagavan's role in its editing, can be found in the introduction to Guru Vachaka Kovai, translated by T. V. Venkatasubramanian, Robert Butler and David Godman. The verses in this section all come from that edition.

The Power of the Presence

numbers can be found in the 'Sources' appendix at the end of the book. Muruganar's own explanatory notes appear after some of the verses.

Muruganar (left) standing on the summit of Arunachala with Kunju Swami in the centre and Yogi Ramaiah on the right of the front row. The Deepam cauldron is behind them.

The nature of the Guru

- 1 The Guru is the sat-bodham [being-consciousness] that shines abiding as all in all.
- 2 Our Guru's form is the reality that sleeps without sleeping in the Heart. He is the self-luminous effulgence that shines in the Heart like a beautiful lamp that needs no kindling. To those who have experienced merging in the Heart he is a luscious fruit full of the sweet clarity of the supreme bliss that, without a trace of aversion, causes an ever-increasing desire [for itself]. His grace indeed is the true wealth.

- 3 The jnana-Guru appears to be an ordinary human being, but he actually abides as the transcendental space [of consciousness]. Those whose minds do not recognise him as the formless reality are the chief amongst those who are sinners, and whose conduct is evil.
- 4 As the inner and the outer, as 'I' and 'this', as this world and the next, pervading all as the boundless radiance of consciousness, the Guru is the unmoving support, the jewel-like lamp that shines effortlessly and continuously in the Hearts of true devotees.<sup>36</sup>
- 5 The jnana-Guru actually abides as both the Atma-swarupa [real nature of the Self] and the Siva-swarupa [real nature of Siva] within the Hearts of devotees, although in their externalised view he appears and moves around as if he is different [from them]. True jnana will not dawn for anyone who has not known experientially, through investigation in the heart, the essence of the upadesa 'You are That' which [the Guru] silently and unceasingly conveys to his devotees through the language of his gaze.<sup>37</sup>

The power of the Guru

- 6 The manner in which the Guru sits majestically in state on the Heart-throne of his devotees whom he has taken up, destroying their egos, is lofty like a mountain, splendid and glorious. Those who have experienced this do not talk about it. Those who talk about it have not experienced it. The

---

<sup>36</sup> 'The jewel-like lamp that shines effortlessly and continuously' is a translation of a term that denotes a lamp that is self-kindling and which maintains its light without any outside assistance.

<sup>37</sup> Upadesa means 'teachings'. More specifically, it denotes the teachings that are transmitted to the disciple by the Guru.

The Power of the Presence

abundant utterances of devotees [jnanis], which are sacred like the Vedas, bear witness to this.<sup>38</sup>

- 7 Regard only him who possesses the rare attribute of radiating that all-encompassing supreme power [akila-para-sakti] as the jnana-Guru<sup>39</sup> who has the enormous power to merge, through his causeless sweet grace, any jiva [individual being] that comes to him with genuine love into the indescribable non-dual paramatma-swarupa [true nature of the Supreme Self], whose nature is attribute-free consciousness.
- 8 The Guru, the benefactor of true jnana, who truly shines as the Self that possesses unlimited splendour, is the primal silence that puts to flight the perverse arguments that arise through the persistent stain of infatuation with the world.<sup>40</sup>
- 9 The excellent sahaja nishtai – the natural abidance as Atma-swarupa – of the jnana-Guru who is freed of the ego impurity [anava mala] is the weapon that has the power to rapidly home in on, uproot and throw away the chit-jada knot of disciples who have, with rapturous delight, taken refuge in his feet.<sup>41</sup>

Muruganar: As the other two malas [impurities], karma and maya, exist by depending on the anava mala, the implication is that the Guru is freed from all the three impurities.

---

<sup>38</sup> The phrase ‘The abundant utterances of devotees [jnanis]’ does not contradict the earlier statement, ‘Those who have experienced this do not talk about it’. The ‘abundant utterances’ are those remarks which state that the experience of the Self cannot be encapsulated in words.

<sup>39</sup> The jnana-Guru is the one who is established in true knowledge, jnana, and who has the capacity to reveal that state to those who are unaware of it.

<sup>40</sup> Muruganar gave a title to this verse: ‘The Greatness of the Guru.’

<sup>41</sup> Saiva Siddhanta teaches that there are three impurities, known as malas, which prevent one from experiencing Sivam: anava, which is the ego, karma and maya. The chit-jada knot is the bond that appears to exist between the inert (jada) body and consciousness (chit).

This [Guru Vachaka Kovai] verse explains the power of natural Self-abidance. Because outwardly the Guru appears to be doing nothing, let no one think that he is not bestowing his grace. The very nature of his Self-abidance is grace. This truth will become clear to those who sit in his presence with a still mind, attained through inward attention.

The necessity of the Guru

- 10 An external Guru is needed because the desire-intoxicated, infatuated mind rushes out without listening with love to the truth unceasingly proclaimed in the Heart by the Self, being-consciousness.

Muruganar: It is because of the immaturity [in the seeker] that a Guru appears outside, assuming a form. In truth, the Guru is only the inner Self. As we do not seek with longing and love the truth of that Self which shines unceasingly in the Heart, the power of grace manifests a Guru outside, who appears as separate from us.

- 11 It is impossible to experience the marvellous dance of true jnana in the Heart unless the antics of the unbridled monkey-mind cease through the grace-power of the valiant one who wields the divinely granted sword of true jnana, he who has already cut off and brought down [his own] mind-demon.
- 12 You may have acquired all the virtues and renounced all the vices; you may have renounced totally all your relationships and have no attachment; you may have completely performed all the many penances enjoined upon the virtuous by the scriptures; but however great you may be by virtue of your intellect and accomplishments, will you attain the experience, the state of kaivalyam [oneness] that is wholly bliss, until you obtain, as a result of meritorious karma, the good fortune of seeing the jnana-Guru?

The Power of the Presence

- 13 Unless we first obtain the divine grace of a Guru, a jivanmukta [a liberated being] in whose perspective the triputi-differences<sup>42</sup> have ended and who shines as the undivided and single essence, it will be impossible to obtain the life of liberation and live illustriously under the shade of God's twin feet, [a life] that is all bliss and the highest of all benefits.

Muruganar: As it is difficult for ordinary jivas to get redeemed by directly knowing the limitation-free swarupa [real nature] of the Supreme that shines unceasingly as 'I-I' in everyone's Heart as their own Self, they should first worship the Guru's form, destroy their delusion and attain redemption. This is the implication. Though the Guru appears to be like a human being in the perspective of ordinary people, through his experience he is indeed the supreme swarupa. Therefore, to imagine differences between him and swarupa is ignorance.

The role of the Guru

- 14 The guru who instructs the disciple, who has taken complete refuge in him, by giving one more prescription for action, instead of directing him towards jnana, and who leads him into activities, saying 'These should be done,' is for the disciple [equivalent to] the coming of cruel Yama and Brahma. Only he who consummates them [the disciples], transforming them into those who have done all that needs to be done, enabling them to attain the true benefit of this birth, is the grace-bestowing, divine Guru.<sup>43</sup>
- 15 Only he who unifies the jiva, making it remain facing directly towards the Self, bestowing in this way the direct

---

<sup>42</sup> The triputis are seer, seeing and seen or knower, knowing and known.

<sup>43</sup> Since Brahma is the god of birth and Yama the god of death, the verse is implying that gurus who get their disciples involved in unnecessary activities, instead of directing them towards jnana, will be responsible for them being reborn.

Muruganar

experience of supreme Self-knowledge, is extolled by the great ones as Iswara swarupa [he whose nature is Iswara] and Atma-swarupa [the Self]. Accept him alone as the Guru, the Supreme One.

Muruganar: The great ones are those who are complete in their scholarship and conduct. Unless one exists as Iswara swarupa, it will not be possible to turn anyone towards Atma-swarupa, one's own Self, and through that grant experience of true knowledge. It has therefore been said that he who can do it is Iswara swarupa. The Tamil saying 'He who teaches the letter is God' has the same implication. Here, the letter [akshara] refers to the imperishable Atma-swarupa.

- 16 The demeaning good and evil karma [of devotees] originates from activities prompted by the desire and aversion that arise through vasanas.<sup>44</sup> He alone is the true Guru who dispels their suffering and bestows the bliss of liberation upon those who, tossed about by the power of their karma, seek refuge in him.
- 17 The Guru who abides as swarupa, the radiant light that illumines even the physical lights [the sun, the moon and fire] that exist in this world, will reveal the deceptively real to be unreal to those who suffer by taking the unreal to be real.<sup>45</sup>
- 18 If you examine what it is that the Guru-fathers reveal and impart to the disciples who rush off to circumambulate the earth in search of a teacher, it is simply the wondrous space of consciousness.

---

<sup>44</sup> Vasanas are the latent desires that impel one to action. In Bhagavan's teachings they survive the death of the physical body and later cause another form to arise in which those unfulfilled desires can be experienced.

<sup>45</sup> The last line may also mean, 'will reveal the deceptively real to be unreal to those who speak foolishly that the unreal is real'.

The Power of the Presence

- 19 The eternal state, the refuge where one rests free from the weariness of wandering hither and thither in distress, is the wondrous turiya<sup>46</sup> firmament, Sivam, the Self-supreme, which flourishes as the undivided being-consciousness [and is revealed by] the jnana-Guru.
- 20 Through the Guru appearing in the waking state [of the disciple] – which is actually a dream that originates in the sleep of ignorance – the disciple will lose the shrouding ignorance and attain jnana. The validating analogy for this is: when the elephant sees a lion in its dream – which originates in sleep – the elephant's sleep ends and it wakes up.<sup>47</sup>
- 21 The bewildered and confused minds of devotees flow and flee away into the pathways of the worthless senses. Be assured that the wise utterances of the one who has taken firm possession of the Heart [the Guru] are the excellent signposts to the goal of having their minds abide in the Heart, ending their outward flow.
- 22 Iswara, the Atma-swarupa, while remaining beyond mind-consciousness and shining free from attributes and limitations, assumes these two [attributes and limitations] through pure maya, [and then] appears in the very visible form of the physical Guru in order to bestow his grace on

---

<sup>46</sup> Turiya (the fourth) is the underlying state, the substratum in which the three states of waking, dreaming and sleeping appear and disappear.

<sup>47</sup> The analogy of the elephant waking up when it sees a lion in its dream can be found in verse two of Ozhivil Odukkam, a Tamil philosophical work composed by Kannudaiya Vallalaar several centuries ago:

If the Sadguru did not cast his glance upon him, bringing him to absolute stillness, free of all distress, just as a majestic lion appears in the dream of a rutting elephant, stopping it in its tracks, by the study of what [subjects] may he accomplish the loss of the ego-self?

devotees. His grace is only the being-consciousness that shines unbroken as 'I-I' in the stillness [that is experienced] when the ego subsides in the Heart, its source, by enquiry, with its attention turned towards the Self.

- 23 The Guru abides without the base mental attitude of 'I' and 'mine', which exist through their dependence on erroneous understanding. He is the flame of bodha [knowledge] that will shine as the Self of the seeker, conferring such a clarity of knowledge in his heart, he will no longer be distressed by his longing for grace.<sup>48</sup>
- 24 The Guru, the Master of jnana, gives out clearly and concisely the true import of all the widely differing [scriptural] statements, skilfully establishing their relevance so that they are shown to be completely harmonised. May his feet rest upon my head!
- 25 The Guru who has ascended to the summit of the hill of virtues such as jnana, desirelessness and renunciation, and who remains there, has accepted responsibility for his disciples. However, it is the obligation of the disciple to remain, even in his dreams, steadfastly established on the true path that the Guru teaches from his own deathless experience.

Meditating on the Guru

- 26 Meditating in the way that one ought to meditate on the sweet and ineffable grace of the Supreme Guru, and remaining still without getting caught in illusion, the unreal and deceptive panorama that appears in front of us – this alone is bliss.

---

<sup>48</sup> The idea being presented here is that once seekers have a direct experience of true knowledge, they will no longer pine for grace because they already have the full experience of it. The word bodha, translated here as 'knowledge', can be equated in this context with jnana.

The Power of the Presence

- 27 Those who are yoked to samsara by the twin karmas [good and bad] that arise through ignorance, the powerful dense delusion, suffer. The devotion and longing they feel for the grace of the Guru, who has taken responsibility for them, is alone the medicine for dispelling their mental anguish.

Muruganar: It is the daily experience of everyone that sorrow arises through mental movements. These arise in the jiva through samsara,<sup>49</sup> which in turn arises from the twin karmas. As restlessness of mind is itself sorrow, the medicine to destroy it is very much needed by sadhakas [spiritual practitioners]. That medicine is meditating on the Guru's grace by following his teachings, which lead to complete contentment of mind. You should know that there is no greater calming medicine than this.

- 28 Know that the Heart-directed conduct in which one steadfastly holds onto jnana in the way one has been taught, and abides there firmly as being-consciousness, without letting the mind stray towards the ignoble sense objects, is alone the true teaching [of the Guru].<sup>50</sup>

- 29 If you want to attain liberation and redeem yourself by cutting asunder with the sword of jnana the false ignorance that has strongly bound you in the form of a jiva, let your mind spring up immediately with surging love and, without wasting a moment of your life, meditate constantly upon the golden, lotus-like feet of the Lord who, in the form of the Guru, has taken you into his fold.

Muruganar: Because consciousness is real, to emphasise that ignorance is false, it is termed as 'false ignorance'. While that which truly exists shines all the time wholly as supreme bliss, that which does not exist appears centre-stage, as if real, and, becoming the cause of all the miseries of samsara, veils the real. From this it becomes clear that all the sadhanas [spiritual practices] such as karma and bhakti [love and devotion] that are enjoined by the scriptures are useful only for destroying that unreality [by revealing it to be] non-existent. Unless meditation becomes uninterrupted, like a continuous stream of oil, it will not attain strength. The implication is, meditation should be practised all the time.

---

<sup>49</sup> Samsara is the recurring cycle of births and deaths that all jivas (individual beings) have to endure on account of their good and bad karma (the twin karmas).

<sup>50</sup> This verse may also give the meaning that when the Guru abides in the state of jnana, without being distracted, this itself is the teaching.

- 30 The state of being the best among the noble disciples is this: a constancy of mind whence springs forth the feeling of supreme devotion [parabhakti] that manifests when the 'I' is lost in the radiance of the state of silence, the Supreme. Know and keep in your mind that this is itself the state of being the Guru.

Muruganar: As the feeling of parabhakti is itself jnana-swarupa [the real nature of jnana], the firmness of that state, which is noble discipleship, shines as the state of the Guru. The eminent unity of both means and attainment, and of the state of the Guru and disciple, have been explained in this way.

The glance of the Guru

- 31 Since his glance transmutes the rusty iron that is the jiva into the gold that is the taint-free jnana-swarupa, the grace-bestowing eyes of the Guru-Lord are the potent alchemical substance that we should cherish, devoting to it our full attention, having purged ourselves of our flaws through self-examination.
- 32 With his twin eyes the Guru will instantaneously kill without killing the one who came into existence without actually existing in such a way that 'that which is not' vanishes as 'that which is not', leaving that which exists as the transcendental light shining as 'that which is'.

The Power of the Presence

- 33 Like a deer caught in the jaws of a tiger, those who are trapped by the Sadguru's jnana-bestowing glance of grace will never be abandoned. Rather, they are destined to lose their individuality, their restricted nature, and attain liberation.
- 34 The Guru abides as the silent benefactor who reveals the light that shines as the one and only eternal residue. If his eyes and the eyes of the disciple meet in total harmony, spoken words are redundant.<sup>51</sup>
- 35 Those who, through rare, intense and surging devotion, exist by trusting solely in the Guru's piercing glance of grace will live in this world like Indra [the king of the gods]. There will be no suffering for them.<sup>52</sup>
- 36 Beyond the reach of both mind and speech is the glory of those who have the good fortune, earned through past tapas, of becoming the target of the grace-bestowing glance of the Guru, he who has ripened into the para-swarupa [the supreme or ultimate swarupa] through the excellence of the matchless experience of Self-knowledge.

Muruganar: The sole and excellent benefit of tapas [spiritual effort] is to become the target of the Guru's glance of grace. As, from that very moment, they have entered the path of redemption, and as their ego-consciousness also gets destroyed, it is said that their greatness is beyond mind and speech.

The grace of the Guru

- 37 Peace of mind, shanti, which is desired by everyone, is not attained by anyone, anywhere, through any means, except through the grace of the Guru. Therefore, those who want peace should continuously enquire and seek alone that grace in the Heart, with their whole mind.

---

<sup>51</sup> The second sentence of this verse is from Tirukkural, verse 1100.

<sup>52</sup> Generally 'live in this world like Indra' would imply 'enjoying the maximum amount of pleasure', but Muruganar has appended a brief note to this verse that says, "They will live like Indra, rejoicing in the spiritual life'.

- 38 Those of perfect and mature wisdom will declare: 'Reality, the consummation of jnana that shines in the perfectly pure state of mauna [silence], the hard-to-attain vedantic experience, will, through the Guru's grace, spontaneously flare up and shine as "I-I" within the Heart.'
- 39 The richness of that holy abode, the expanse of true jnana that possesses the greatness that nothing else excels, will not be easily experienced through anything other than the grace of the Guru that destroys the flaw [that is the ego].
- 40 The blessed grace of God, who has the eightfold form, will be impossible to secure except through the grace of the Guru. It will not come through learning or through any other means, but it will arise spontaneously through devotion.<sup>53</sup>
- 41 When the sadhaka's [spiritual seeker's] efforts result in failure, the benefit of this [effort] is to make him understand that Self-realisation can only be attained by the Guru's grace, and not by personal exertion, thus preparing the sadhaka to seek the cool grace bestowed by the Guru.
- 42 By taking the Sadguru as your sole refuge, you should know that the cause of the continuous and distressing confusion that nurtures births is the fragmented mind which regards itself as different from God, Atma-swarupa [the true nature of the Self]. You should also learn from him the means for ending it [the fragmented mind] and, adopting that means, <sup>53</sup> The eight forms of God are the five elements, the sun, the moon and the jiva.

---

The Power of the Presence

you should, through his grace, steadfastly unite with the Self, the ego-free swarupa, and abide in mauna. This alone bestows eminence.

Guru and disciple

- 43 Guru and disciple are only described as different through the imaginary feeling of upadhi [limitation]. In the mauna union, the summit of jnana in which these two ideas [Guru and disciple] merge through the true experience of the Self, is there even a trace of speech and breath? As the ego, the cause that creates the sense of difference, is destroyed, the minds of the two become one through their real nature, pure being, and cease. In such a situation the talking and listening that consist of spoken words, which take place between the two, are of no use.

Muruganar: The non-dual experience, the state of mauna that arises through the Guru's teachings, has already occurred. Therefore, the spoken words have to be considered as those necessitated by worldly behaviour, and not for any specific [spiritual] purpose.

- 44 What is the place where the minds of the two [Guru and disciple] merge once they have reached and dwelt there? When one investigates this, the arrival and the abidance in that place [the Heart] is the true conversation that goes on, without a break, between the two who converse through auspicious and extremely sharp consciousness.

Muruganar: The word 'two' can also refer to true disciples of the same Guru who move closely with each other. The place where the minds of the two merge is the Heart. 'The arrival and the abidance in that place' means attaining tanmaya nishta [Self-abidance]. As this alone is useful, it is the true conversation that takes place between jnanis. This is also described as mauna and paravak [transcendental speech].

Revering and worshipping the Guru

- 45 You may, through body, speech and mind, perform, without leaving any out, all the possible varieties of worship to the jnana Guru, he who is the walking Supreme Siva who has accepted with delight the disciple. However, [for the disciple,] losing the idea that he exists as a distinct entity, separate from that Guru who shines as the soul of his soul, completely dissolving, like ice in water, his individuality in his [the Guru's] supreme swarupa, and becoming one with him as love alone – this is the perfect and complete worship that he should perform.

Muruganar: Unlike that perfect worship all other kinds of worship, which cannot be performed continuously with all the senses and the mind, are limited and incomplete. [However,] they also have as their ultimate goal the egoless state of abiding in the service of God.

- 46 Through the light of a lamp, even darkness that exists a long distance away departs, but the darkness that is present at the foot of the lamp-post is not removed by the lamp. In the same way, those disciples who stay a long way away from the Guru get redeemed by worshipping in their hearts the jnana-Guru who cannot be limited by time or space. Even so, some of those who get the good fortune of staying physically close to the Guru, like his shadow, do not become ripe in jnana, losing their ego-darkness, but die ripe only in physical age. This is due to their immaturity.
- 47 If it is properly understood, the tradition of intimate and true disciples showing external deference to the Guru, who has accepted them as rightfully his, is similar to the respect shown by a wife to her husband, which is limited to outward behaviour only.<sup>54</sup>

---

<sup>54</sup> The disciple may realise the Self and attain oneness with his Guru, but even then he still gives his Guru the usual outward show of courtesy

The Power of the Presence

- 48 The ignorant ego is the cause of the appearance of the utter delusion, the profitless feeling of difference. This [feeling of difference] makes you regard the non-dual supreme reality, the Atma-swarupa, the real nature of Guru and Siva, as split up into Guru-disciple, Siva-jiva, and so on. The true meaning of the namaskaram [prostration] that you perform to them [Siva and the Guru], fully aware and in a fitting manner, is only the mauna in which the ignorant ego does not arise even slightly in the Heart.
- 49 Bear in mind that the true puja [ritual worship] to the jnana Guru is only the Self-abidance in which the vasana-free mauna surges once the disciple-consciousness that proclaimed itself as 'I' is destroyed by the raging fire of the consciousness of the jnana-Guru, he who is God Himself.
- 50 The true puja performed to the Guru by worthy disciples is the complete destruction of the false 'disciple-consciousness'. This is brought about by firm abidance in the state of 'Guru-consciousness', the experience of fullness that arises through the Heartward enquiry, 'Who is the "I" who has been accepted as a disciple?'
- 51 Know clearly that the excellent conduct wherein the jiva-mind does not rise [as 'I'] in the all-pervading supreme firmament, the sun of true jnana that shines as the real nature of the Guru, constitutes the only puja worthy of being performed to the Guru-Lord.
- 52 The limitless perspective, Guru-consciousness, sees everything that appears as 'I' and 'this', which are dependently interlinked, as the swarupa of one's own jnana-Guru. Gaining this perspective through the way of virtuous and respect. Bhagavan occasionally compared the behaviour of such disciples to that of a wife who publicly treats her husband with respect even though she has experienced sexual union with him.

---

Muruganar

conduct is indeed the puja that is worthy of being performed by the true disciple.

Muruganar: Everything that is known is included in 'I' and 'this' [aham and idam]. The state in which the jiva-bodha [individual-consciousness] is gone is Siva-bodha [consciousness of Siva]. Following the same line of reasoning, the state in which the 'disciple-bodha' is gone is said to be 'Guru-bodha'.

- 53 When the ice of the ego-consciousness that is limited to the form of the body dissolves in the ocean of Guru-consciousness that is the experience of the Self which exists and shines as the one savour of love, know that this is Guru-puja.
- 54 The polluting ego-view causes the fullness of the Guru, which is present everywhere, without any absence, to be limited. Only the behaviour in which this does not appear is the shining puja to the Guru who stands out like a mountain in a plain.
- 55 After surrendering your body, possessions and soul to the jnana-Guru, to regard any of them as 'I' or 'mine' is to commit the sin of stealing back what has been given away as a gift. You should know that avoiding this fault is the authentic worship of the Sadguru.

The feet of the Guru

- 56 For those who possess the quality of habitually meditating upon the feet of the Guru, the blazing flame of flawless true jnana, their devotion, dispelling their suffering, will elicit the grace of that Supreme One, and through that grace their minds will become clear and they will attain true jnana.
- 57 For those who have the good fortune of living a life in which they take the feet of the Guru, the Supreme, as the sole target of their attention, a longing to merge with Sivam will flourish. That true devotion will itself become the fire of jnana that will completely scorch to destruction the desires for the false, the non-Self.

The Power of the Presence

- 58 As worship of the feet of the Guru simultaneously destroys the twin vasanas accumulated over endless aeons, and as it brings forth in the Heart the dawn of jnana that is the cause for our not being frightened of indescribable ignorance, that worship, performed with devotion and reverence, alone is the befitting true mantra for noble disciples in whom dispassion is strong.

Muruganar: The twin vasanas are the auspicious and inauspicious [subha and asubha] vasanas. As worship of the feet of the Guru, by itself, enables disciples to attain the excellent benefits of mantra yoga, which are destruction of the mind and jnana, that worship is said to be 'true mantra'.

- 59 Abandoning the protection of the feet of the Guru-Lord, who has extinguished the burning fires of the triple miseries [tapatraya],<sup>55</sup> the ego suffers, seeking water in the scorching mirage of the perceived sense objects. When this mischief of the ego is stilled and one becomes established [at those feet], that indeed is the puja to be performed to the twin lotus feet of the Pure One.
- 60 To destroy the form of the mind, enquire into the ego, the delusion, and enter the Heart. Only this is the puja to the lotus feet of the Guru's holy form, he who abides in the mauna that is beyond the mind.

---

<sup>55</sup> The triple miseries (tapatraya) are those brought about by oneself, those brought about by natural events, and those that occur as a result of fate or supernatural agencies.

- 61 Like a cataract upon the eye, the ego-view plays tricks on us, masquerading as being-consciousness even as it moves about as the insentient body. To prevent its formation and growth is puja to the graceful twin lotus feet of the Guru who exists and shines as the transcendental firmament.

The superiority of the Guru over God

- 62 Even if those great ones who have firmly embraced the means to redeem themselves from the miseries of samsara happen to deviate from conduct enjoined by the Vedas, either due to forgetfulness or any other reason, they should on no account transgress the command of the Guru who has told them about the ultimate truth.

Muruganar: To those who deviate from vedic conduct, there is [a possibility] of atonement, but for those who transgress the command of the Guru, there can be no atonement. It has therefore been said, 'Though one may transgress the Vedas' commands, one should never transgress the Guru's command'.

- 63 If a person offends against God, it is possible to rectify the matter through the grace of the Guru, but it is impossible even for God to nullify an offence committed against the Guru. This is what the declarations of the great ones assert.

Muruganar: Devotion to the Guru is therefore more powerful than devotion to God.<sup>56</sup>

---

<sup>56</sup> The following two verses are from Guru Gita, a text on the greatness of the Guru. The Guru Gita is a portion of the Skanda Purana:

- 79 If Siva is angry, the Guru will protect you, but if the Guru is angry, no one can save you. Therefore, with all your efforts, take refuge in him.
- 106 Even gods and sages cannot save one who has been cursed by the Guru. Such a wretch soon perishes, without the least shadow of doubt.

Liberation through my Guru's grace

- 64 If I were to declare the experience that arose through the instructions of my Guru, it would be: 'All that I perceived before as a forest of attachments is none other than the unuttered expanse of mauna, true jnana. All relative knowledge, which is insignificant, is a dream.'
- 65 Even as I wallowed in misery, confounding myself with the form of the body, he [Ramana], banishing as 'not "I"' the dirty insentient body, lovingly ruled over me as the Guru who bestowed knowledge of the indestructible reality. May the feet of the Mauna Guru, benevolent grace itself, rest on my head!
- 66 I have known! I have known with certainty the state of supreme truth that is full of transcendental, being-consciousness! I have known that in truth there is never in the least any attainment of bondage, liberation, and so on, which are fabricated when one imagines that one is separate from reality.
- 67 When examined [it will be known that] these subtle ideas just declaimed are the silent discourse joyously bestowed upon me by Ramana, the jnana-Guru, my true Lord, who instructed me by manifesting before me as the foremost Brahma-jnani.<sup>57</sup>

Muruganar: The subtle truth described in the previous verses is realised in jnana. Therefore, what the jnana-Guru bestowed upon me is the essence of the mauna experience. Though the jnana-Guru ever abides within, he manifested outside with a physical body similar to ours to bring us under his rule by bestowing his grace. This is indicated by [the words] 'manifesting before me'. As the understanding becomes firm only through mauna, it has been described as 'the silent discourse'.

---

<sup>57</sup> A brahma-jnani denotes a jnani who is established in Brahman.

Muruganar is sitting next to Bhagavan in front of the two standing women.

Padamalai

Padamalai (A Garland for the Feet) is a long 3,000-verse poem that was composed by Muruganar in the 1950s. The Tamil word 'Padam' can be translated as 'the foot', but in this poem it has many other connotations. It denotes the state of the Self as well as the physical form of Bhagavan. Metaphorically the jiva, the individual, surrenders by putting its head on the Guru's feet (Padam) and merging in them. Padam thus represents both the physical feet of the Guru and the state one attains by surrendering one's individuality there.

Most of the verses in this poem contain the words 'en Padam' which mean 'so says Padam'. The inclusion of this phrase indicates that this is direct speech uttered by Bhagavan (Padam) himself. To avoid unnecessary repetitions these 'en Padam' attributions have been omitted from the translation. When there is a slight variation (such as 'Padam declares') these have been included in the translation.

The verses in this section have been taken from a chapter entitled 'Bhagavan's Promises and Declarations'.

The Power of the Presence

Knowing and experiencing me

- 1 Padam tells and reveals: 'Instead of knowing with certainty by enquiry that I myself am present as your 'I', why do you despair?'
- 2 To become established as the Self within the Heart is to experience my real nature, which is pure bliss.
- 3 Know me as the true essence of jnana that shines uninterruptedly in your Heart. Destroy the objectifying awareness of the ego-mind that arrogantly cavorts as 'I'.
- 4 When I am shining in your Heart as 'I-I', your own real nature, your attempt to 'attain' me is indeed a great marvel!
- 5 To meditate on my swarupa, which possesses the light that is the source of life, all that is needed is your one-pointedness of mind.
- 6 Whether you retire to the forest or remain in the midst of everyday life, attain my swarupa in the home that is the Heart.
- 7 Your search to attain me is like searching all over the world, ceaselessly straining to find the necklace around your own neck.
- 8 Just as you know that the necklace is there by feeling your neck, seek the treasure of the Self, your real nature, within the Heart, and know it.
- 9 Those who have come to my feet with love, and without delaying, are those whose birth has been graced by God. [Theirs is] an eminent and true life.
- 10 Through the thought of the feet of the Guru who has reigned over devotees, the intense darkness of ignorance [present in the] hearts of devotees will perish and ultimate liberation will be attained here and now.

Give me your burdens

- 11 Padam lovingly said: 'It will be a duty well done if you place all your duties upon me.'

- 12 For the cruel disease of burning samsara to end, the prescribed diet is to entrust all your burdens to me.<sup>58</sup>
- 13 In order that your needless anxieties cease, make sure that all your burdens are placed on me through the courageous act of depending totally on grace.
- 14 If you completely surrender all your responsibilities to me, I will accept them as mine and manage them.
- 15 When bearing the entire burden remains my responsibility, why do you have any worries?
- 16 Why do you still retain this attachment to the mental concepts of 'I' and 'mine' when, on that day, you had offered up all those things to me, avowing them to be mine?
- 17 If you enquire and know me, the Self within, in that state there will be no reason for you to worry about the world.
- 18 Abandon the drama [of the world] and seek the Self within. Remaining within, I will protect you, [ensuring] that no harm befalls you.
- 19 Seek my grace within the Heart. I will drive away your darkness and show you the light. This is my responsibility.
- 20 Like the children of an emperor, my devotees are heirs to abundant rejoicing.

Meditating on me

- 21 Splendorous Padam declares: 'Meditating on me with no sense of difference [between us] is accepting my grace and offering yourself to me. This in itself is enough.'
- 22 If you worship me by meditating well on the excellence of my true nature, the greatness of your own true nature will well up in your Heart.

---

<sup>58</sup> 'Prescribed diet' is a translation of pattiyam, an ayurvedic term. Ayurvedic practitioners say that their medicine will not work unless the pattiyam, the prescribed diet, is also followed. The implication in this verse is that the medicine is one's sadhana, such as enquiry or surrender, while the accompanying prescribed diet is entrusting all of one's burdens to Bhagavan.

The Power of the Presence

- 23 Knowing that what abides in your Heart is the Self, my true and real nature, you should search for it there. Only this can be regarded as meditating on me with devotion.
- 24 Padam advises: 'Keeping one's attention on the subtle consciousness that is experienced by the extremely subtle mind is personal service to me.'
- 25 The compassionate heart that flows from me to you will never fail except when you cease to have remembrance of 'me', who command and conduct everything.
- 26 You can know and experience my grace, which is my nature, if you remember me with no forgetfulness in your heart.

Muruganar is sitting in the foreground, on the right.

Union with me

- 27 Seeking my true nature in your Heart, discovering it and rejoicing in it by bathing in the bliss of my jnana swarupa – this is union.
- 28 Only bhakti sadhana performed continuously with love will facilitate easily, in a gradual way, this union.
- 29 Enter with love the temple that is your own Heart and experience the bliss of being absorbed in my swarupa, becoming one with it.
- 30 I myself will command and control a mind that has died by the sacrifice of the ego.

Give me your mind

- 31 'You should offer up to me the bright ruby of your mind. That is the gift that will bring me delight.'
- 32 'The sweet love I have for such a mind I do not have for anything else.' Padam desires this.
- 33 Padam receives the minds of loving devotees as an offering, swallowing them through a ruby-red light.
- 34 Padam accepts only the mind as a fitting offering, rejecting everything else as being incompatible.

Bhagavan's darshan

- 35 Why do you pointlessly find fault with me, saying that I no longer look at you?
- 36 If you would only fix your gaze upon me, you would know that, established in the Heart, my gaze is ever fixed upon you.<sup>59</sup>

---

<sup>59</sup> Bhagavan once made the following remarks:

Bhagavan is always bestowing grace. To regard the real as unreal and the unreal as real is alone ignorance. You yourself are always shining naturally as 'I', 'I'. Does Bhagavan exist apart from that being-consciousness? It is the attention turned towards the body that causes the distinctions between 'you' and 'I'. If, through Self-

Sadhu Om (left) standing next to Muruganar.

- 37 Looking at you from within the Self, I never leave you. How can this fact be known to your externalised vision?

The Shining of my Lord

When Muruganar passed away in the early 1970s, his literary executor, Sadhu Om, took charge of the 20,000 or so verses that Muruganar had written in Tamil but which had never been published in any of his books. Sadhu Om edited and arranged these verses and, with the assistance of Prof. K. Swaminathan, brought them out in a series of books entitled Sri Ramana Jnana Bodham. The Padamalai poem, extracts from which appeared earlier in this chapter, came from volume nine of this series.

---

attention, it [attention to the body] is itself transformed into being-consciousness, and if one realises that the reality is only one, where, then, is the scope for saying 'you' or 'I'? Remaining still, having realised the truth as it is, is the Guru's grace. (Sri Ramana Darsanam, p. 11)

Muruganar

The Shining of my Lord is an anthology of verses<sup>60</sup> that have mostly been taken from volumes one to eight of Sri Ramana Jnana Bodham. The verses in this section, all composed by Muruganar, have been taken from a chapter entitled 'Service and Worship'.

Serving my Lord

- 861 The unique king of grace sits majestically enthroned in my heart, ensuring that I never feel I lack something. The 'I', rising in opposition to him, then enquired, 'What is the personal service I can render to you?' To which he replied, 'Subside within the Self, pure consciousness, without manifesting [as that 'I'].'
- 862 My Lord ordered me, 'Just be, without doing anything'. Having done this, my sole job became the performance of the grace-eliciting true service in which my consciousness firmly rooted itself and clung to that supreme state in which I could not see an alien god to bow to in obeisance.

The fruits of my service

- 863 My Lord, by establishing me in the heart as someone who was possessed by madness for your true nature, you ensured that no other worldly madness possessed me. Because the treacherous ego-ghost perished, losing its continuing existence, all of my actions became an appropriate service to the divine.
- 864 I do not now render any service to the divine as I used to in the past. Like a jnani, I dress up, eat and move about doing nothing. Only my Lord, the non-dual supreme one, could be aware of what my state might be, possessed as it is of divine pride.

---

<sup>60</sup> Translated by T. V. Venkatasubramanian and David Godman and arranged thematically.

The Power of the Presence

- 865 I live in this world with divine exultation because I became enslaved to my Lord and rendered divine service to his feet. From now on, whichever world I may happen to end up in, I will live in the same way, having as my nature the wealth of bliss that is saturated with the perfect light of consciousness.

How to serve

- 866 My Lord, whom I perceived as the ambrosia filling my eyes, became replete within me as the ambrosia of rare deliciousness that I consumed and delighted in. He, the extremely pure swarupa from whom it is impossible to separate, cannot be attained by even the celestials but only by his true servants.
- 867 When one looks into the matter, all that is needed to perform grace-eliciting service to the Guru-Lord who has brought us under his rule is extremely pure devotion in which the mind one-pointedly rejoices in love for that Lord. Nothing else.
- 868 The sole and entire duty for devotees is to live their lives performing service to the Lord who has accepted, as his grace-endowed responsibility, the burden of bearing the devotees' welfare. All the other duties only exist for those other people who are not devotees.
- 869 In the ego-mind that says 'I' there grows a false darkness, a feeling 'I am performing actions' while actions are performed. If it dies, all the actions that one undertakes become tapas. The rule for the discerning path of being is to conduct one's life as an offering to the divine in one's heart.
- 870 Siva-yoga is sinking into the heart through the practice of enquiry into the feet that are in the heart. Only those true devotees who worship through a consciousness that has merged with Sivam are the virtuous devotees who render personal service to the Lord. Even the celestials long to serve the feet of such devotees.

- 871 Heart of mine, I will offer you some beneficial advice. If an irrepressible urge in a heart that has sunk fully and firmly in the Lord arises, acting on that urge becomes service to God. However, desist from performing any action as your own since this will only be the mischievous movement of jiva-bodha [individual consciousness].

How can I now perform puja?

- 872 Because [the state of] abiding bereft of the ego shines faultlessly in my heart as the excellent Siva puja, I perform in this vast world the Siva puja of worshipping swarupa by remaining still, in silence.
- 873 Since my mind now remains merged with the light of pure consciousness, my Lord has bestowed on me a life of distinction in which everything I do has become a supreme puja. How can I now perform puja to his red, golden feet, a puja that would earn me the merit of his grace, since I would need to possess a mind to worship in this restricted way.
- 874 As my Lord has accepted all my thoughts, words and deeds as a divine service rendered exclusively to him, I do not perform puja to the beautiful feet which possess the wealth of grace through rituals whose rules have been laid down, and which many other people adhere to.
- 875 Who am I to perform puja to the grace that is consciousness-the-supreme, that which is everything as it shines within me, the worshipper, as my true nature, as I-I, and as love in my heart?

True and false worship

- 876 Until one enquires and knows one's truth, the world and everything else that veils the supreme swarupa through name and form will appear to be real. One should therefore obtain the Lord's grace, jnana, by diving into the heart through worship performed with an inwardly focused and subtle consciousness. Only when the Lord's grace is attained will the danger whose nature is pramada [Self-forgetfulness] come to an end.

The Power of the Presence

- 877 For sadhakas attempting to attain jnana the virtuous practice of abiding in being [sat-achara] is superior to the practice of following religious observances.
- 878 The supreme exists as one's own nature in the heart. The degraded ego, the deceptive mind that is full of delusion, imagines it [the supreme] to be different from oneself and performs innumerable types of pujas to it. If one ponders over the matter, these pujas are just the play of little children.
- 879 The supreme Sivam shines as the expanse, the flood of grace-silence, the being-consciousness that is free of thinking and forgetting. Jnanis say that worshipping it through the flurry of the jumping ego that has split it into two amounts to disregarding and ridiculing it.
- 880 I have experienced my real nature, the non-dual Self that is the experience of abiding in the Sadasivam<sup>61</sup> which remains merged in my heart as my own nature. Because of this, I do not engage in thoughts associated with performing any upasana [worship]. If I did think in this way, it would amount to suicide by cutting my Self into two.
- 881 The light of the grace-silence, the feet of the Lord whose form is the powerful pure consciousness, will only desire and reach the pure and upright minds that trust them. It will reject and leave as an unsustainable relationship the falsity-filled minds of the deceitful ones who engage in useless, ostentatious worship.

---

<sup>61</sup> Sadasivam (the beingness of Siva-consciousness) is generally synonymous with Sivam (Siva consciousness) but it has the added implication of being a state of Sivam that bestows grace.

Avoid the worship of lesser gods

- 882 The many gods arise and subside in you. I once took you to be a few of those gods. The mental suffering arising from this past mistake of mine was due to my error of not knowing my Self, the substratum.
- 883 Imagining multiple different forms in you who are the one true unique God, I fell into a discordant state. Through the connection with the mind that creates the deception of contradictory differences this servant fell into ignorance and committed this error.
- 884 Without getting angry with me, listen attentively. Do not cherish any lesser deities to fulfil your needs. If you worship the swarupa that remains as the soul of the soul, it has the power to bestow the excellence of true knowledge.
- 885 Do not get perturbed by thinking, with a lack of certainty, that he [Bhagavan] might be this god, that god, or some other god. He is actually the reality, the light that shines as this god, that god and all other gods.
- 886 One may worship this god, that god, or any other god, regarding it as the supreme. When one enquires into consciousness and knows it, all those shining gods will in truth be the chit-swarupa [consciousness-nature] of the sole one, Siva-Ramana.

How do I worship?

- 887 My Lord bestowed his compassion by tying my mind to his feet, ensuring that the straying mind's chaotic nature and excitement came to an end. Through the worship done with true devotion, which took the form of the consciousness experienced in nishtha, which I practised with relish, I attained the state of Brahman.

The Power of the Presence

- 888 Shining as being-consciousness in the heart, the Sadguru enables the arising of the utterly magnificent Self-experience. Since the 'I' has now died, I will worship him in his real nature by being aware of him constantly in the state of peace that is the never-failing life.
- 889 Having destroyed the ego-ghost, the limitation, my Sadguru shines and prospers within my intuitive understanding. Perfectly experiencing the mauna-worship that keeps me absorbed in his feet, I am now incapable of performing other forms of worship that involve thought.
- 890 Exalted one! Lord who ruled over this slave! Your nature, wholly non-dual consciousness, glows in the heart as the expanse of unalloyed grace. Since that extremely perfect fullness is shining bereft of the thinker, thinking of your nature is really odd.
- 891 The heart, through the unique non-dual Self-knowledge, shines, freed from the delusion of the false world that is just a mirage. In such a heart there is absolutely no opportunity for a prayer to be offered through a mind impelled by a desire.

T. P. Ramachandra Iyer

T. P. Ramachandra Iyer, called 'T. P. R.' by all Bhagavan's devotees, was a native of Tiruvannamalai. He saw Bhagavan a few times in his childhood, but at that time he was more attracted by the sweets that were given out as prasad than by Bhagavan's presence or teachings. In the 1920s his interest in religion and philosophy led him finally to Bhagavan. He had asked one of his relatives whether Bhagavan could read his mind and tell him his past and future. The relative responded by telling him to go and see for himself. T. P. R. has described what happened next:

I entered Sri Bhagavan's hall and looked at him. That is all. Sri Bhagavan very graciously and expectantly looked at me. Full of benign compassion, he looked into the very core of my being. I could feel that he was sensing my entire being. I fell flat on my face in prostration to him with an experience as totally consuming as it was convincing. A discovery that 'He' whom I was hankering for all these years, who could sway my entire being and guide my energies, was here. So great yet so simple was this. I rose up. Bhagavan smiled again and bade me be seated. All the emotions, thoughts and surging doubts were nowhere! I felt I had found my refuge, which was the greatest fortune of my life. It was a great conviction born of instant experience through his grace.

In later life T. P. R. worked as a lawyer in Madras, where he handled much of the ashram's legal business in the 1930s and 40s. He also served both as an interpreter and an attendant in Bhagavan's hall.

The Power of the Presence

When he was once asked to explain what impact Bhagavan had had on his life, he replied, 'I am not left with any sense of want or void in internal strength. This is the direct result of a conviction instilled by experiencing the grace of Sri Bhagavan. It should be so with everyone who has sought his grace.'

On an auspicious day in the early thirties a visitor arranged for bhiksha to be given to Sri Bhagavan and all those present at the ashram. While we were talking about the forthcoming meal in the hall, Bhagavan suddenly recalled two early occasions when he was offered a bhiksha.

'After leaving Madurai for good [in 1896], I only ate food in private houses on two occasions. One of them was when I ate at the home of Muthukrishna Bhagavathar of Tirukoilur while I was still travelling to Tiruvannamalai.'

Then, turning to me, he observed, 'The other occasion was

Muthukrishna Bhagavathar's house in Tirukoilur, about 23km from Tiruvannamalai at your grandfather's. That was the only house I ever ate in after coming to Tiruvannamalai.'

I was delighted to hear of the good fortune my grandfather had had in serving Sri Bhagavan in this way. I asked Bhagavan how this came about and he graciously described the event, vividly recapturing the occasion for me.

'After I came to this town, I had bhiksha in your house, eating from a leaf plate. Your grandfather, a devotee of Siva, was there. He was tall, had a stout frame, and was adorned impressively with a garland of rudraksha and other beads. Every day he would unfailingly visit the temple of Arunachaleswara and return only after having darshan. In those days [1896] I used to live near the Gopura Subramania Temple. Every day your grandfather would sit before me for a while without saying anything. Then he would rise and go away. I was a young boy keeping silence. He was an elderly person who also kept silent while he was with me, though he used to watch me all the time. He was well known in the town, and people of consequence used to be his guests. Do you know what happened? One day, some official arrived at his house and arrangements were made for a feast. That day also, as usual, after going into the temple and having darshan, he came to me and sat down. The thought came to him that he should take me that day to his house and give me bhiksha.

A courtyard of the Arunachaleswara temple in Tiruvannamalai. The Gopura Subramania shrine where Bhagavan stayed is at the top of the stairway in the back corner of the courtyard.

‘As soon as he rose to return home, he abandoned his customary silence and said to me, “Hum, hum, get up! Get up! We will go to my home, have bhiksha and come back.”

‘What to do? I was not used to speaking, so I made negative signs, shaking my head and hands, signifying that it was not necessary. He did not listen to me or heed me. He was determined to take me that day and offer bhiksha. What could I do? He was big and strong whereas I was small and slight in comparison.

‘He repeated his demand: “Hum, hum, get up! Get up! You are just a youth. Leave yoga and tapas for a while. We shall go to my home, eat bhiksha and return.”

‘So saying, he took my arm, linked it into his, and made me get up and follow him. I was led to his house, which was near the temple chariot. It was a very spacious house with verandas on both sides. In between there was a big open courtyard with an edifice to goddess Tulasi in the centre. He made me take the most important place on the northern veranda. Then he spread a leaf larger than all the others and served me himself. It was only after I had finished eating that he ate his own meal. That was the only occasion I entered a house in this town. In those days, because I never had a bath, the body would be smelling. No one would come close to me. In spite of all that, your grandfather used to come unflinching and sit with me. In this town, so many people would come, see me and go. But he alone realised that though I was a young boy, what was in this [body] was a Fullness [Purna].’

In his youth, Bhagavan’s body was remarkably resilient, but as the years went by he began to be afflicted by several ailments. In the last ten years of his life he was rarely in good health. His poor state of health was often exacerbated by his habit of refusing medicine or medical advice. In the early 1940s, for example, Sri Bhagavan showed symptoms of slight jaundice. He avoided medication and grew weaker and weaker every day. Devotees implored him to take some treatment, but without success. Some of us prayed while a few others did silent pradakshinas of the hall in which Sri Bhagavan was seated. Major Chadwick was prominent among those who were beseeching Sri Bhagavan to take some medicine.

One day, just as I was starting from home to go to my office in Madras, the postman handed me a letter. It was from Major Chadwick. The letter, I recollect, read like this:

‘Dear T. P. R., I am sorry to tell you of the declining health of Sri Bhagavan. He is growing weaker every day and is doing nothing to alleviate it. He will not take any medicines or heed our requests and persuasions. Seeing all this makes us very miserable. Today a thought came to me. You know that Sri Bhagavan always avoids medicines, but he does not reject ayurvedic preparations such as black halwa (lehiyam). If he is offered some, he may accept it. So why don’t you go to some ayurvedic expert or pharmacy and ask for some medicine for Sri Bhagavan’s symptoms and condition? You can then make it up in the form of a lehiyam and send it to him at the ashram. If it is your good karma he may be pleased to take it. But don’t say I wrote to you or expressed concern. You can say that by chance you found a well-prepared lehiyam that is good for many things, and that it is only a tonic and not a medicine. I shall expect your immediate response.’

After reading this letter, I went straight to the Venkataramana Dispensary in Mylapore. I met the senior physician in charge there and narrated the symptoms, without disclosing the identity of the person who had them. I requested him to prescribe and give something helpful. The doctor, of course, asked me why I could not bring the patient for a personal examination. I gave Bhagavan's age and a few other details and somehow convinced the doctor that the patient was unable to come in person. The doctor listened to my story, prescribed two items, an oil and a lehiyam called jiragavilvadi lehiyam, and advised me how to use them. I knew Sri Bhagavan was not in the habit of consuming any oils internally, so I merely purchased one pound of lehiyam and went to my office. I kept a small portion for myself, since I knew that Sri Bhagavan would reject it if he felt that I had bought the medicine specially for him.

Major Chadwick standing near Lakshmi’s samadhi.

T. P. R. is standing second from the left. Chinnaswami is sitting third from the left.

I packed the rest and sent it to Sri Niranjanananda Swami, the sarvadhikari of the ashram, with a letter saying:

T. P. R. standing with Bhagavan on the hill

‘Dear Sri Chinnaswami, today as I was passing through Mylapore I peeped into Venkataramana Dispensary where a fresh lehiyam was being prepared. It was called jiragavilvadi lehiyam and it was ready for sale. I felt impelled to buy some and did so. It is so sweet and good that I am sending it on to you. I have kept a small portion for myself. You may place the remainder before Sri Bhagavan as an offering. This is not a medicine. It belongs to the class of tonics that are generally taken by everyone.’

I was told later that Sri Chinnaswami placed both the parcel and the letter before Sri Bhagavan.

That weekend, as was usual then with me, I left for Tiruvannamalai. After I had prostrated to Sri Bhagavan in the hall he turned to me and showed me a small container.

‘See!’ he said, ‘This is the lehiyam you have sent. I am using it regularly four times a day. Jiraga and vilva are very good for biliousness.’

I felt elated and happy at the success of Mr Chadwick’s scheme and sat down before Sri Bhagavan.

However, after about half a minute Sri Bhagavan asked me, ‘Did anyone write to you to send this?’

I immediately admitted it and replied, ‘Yes, Bhagavan,

The Power of the Presence

Chadwick wrote to me and suggested that I do what I did. Since I also wanted Sri Bhagavan to regain his health, I did what he asked me to do, pretending that I was doing it on my own initiative.'

Sri Bhagavan laughed graciously and exclaimed, 'See that! See that!'

That evening Chadwick entered the hall at 4 p.m. looking elated and happy, but he had hardly risen from his obeisance when Sri Bhagavan asked, 'Chadwick! Did you write anything?'

For a moment Chadwick looked shocked and surprised, but then, as he had initiated his action because of his extreme love and devotion to Sri Bhagavan, he happily owned up.

'Yes, Bhagavan, I wrote all that to T. P. R. What can we do? Sri Bhagavan will never take any medicine. We devotees were miserable because we had to witness Sri Bhagavan growing weaker day by day. So I wrote for the medicine and now I am happy.'<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Though Bhagavan generally refused to take medicines that were sent to him, there was one occasion when he alarmed everyone by volunteering to eat them all simultaneously. The following account comes from Bhagavan Smritulu and is narrated by Roda McIver:

Many devotees used to bring or send medicines for Bhagavan. Some were for external application to his rheumatic joints while others were supposed to be ingested for strength. Since Bhagavan rarely touched such donations, bottles from many different medical systems accumulated. One day Bhagavan asked for a big empty bottle to be brought and then asked for all the medicines that had accumulated to be poured into it. When this task had been accomplished, he asked his attendant to give him one spoonful of the mixture every day. Some of the medicines were poisonous and were only meant to be applied externally.

'How can you make such a request? someone asked in amazement.

Bhagavan answered, 'People send these medicines because of the love they feel towards me. How can I apply or drink all of them? If I mix them all together and eat a portion every day, everyone can be satisfied that I am taking a little of his medicine. This is the best way to dispose of all these things.'

The ashram doctor was sent for and when he heard what Bhagavan was proposing to do, he came running to the hall. He Bhagavan was unable to criticise his secret activity because it had been motivated by such love and devotion.

Bhagavan liked simple remedies, preferably those made from ingredients that could be found locally. He knew the medicinal properties of many of the plants that were growing wild on Arunachala and occasionally recommended them to devotees. He even composed a few Tamil verses that contained recipes for various ayurvedic preparations.<sup>2</sup> He was a strong advocate of a was shocked when he saw what was in the bottle. There were ayurvedic, allopathic and homeopathic medicines and various poisonous oils that were not meant to be drunk at all. Everyone, including the doctor, begged Bhagavan not to take any of the mixture. Someone nearby even attempted to hide the bottle so that Bhagavan would not have access to it.

---

The matter was eventually resolved when one of the devotees had the bright idea of invoking Bhagavan's legendary sense of equality.

'You always share everything with the devotees in the hall,' he said. 'How can you eat all this by yourself and not give any to the people around you?'

Bhagavan accepted this point, but since he knew that the mixture might make everyone present ill, he agreed that his attendant could dispose of the whole bottle, without anyone having to sample it.

<sup>2</sup> Some of these verses were included in a Tamil booklet entitled Precious Words and Stray Verses of the Maharshi that was brought out to commemorate Bhagavan's birth centenary in 1980. So far as I am aware, none of these verses has ever been translated. S. S. Cohen (Guru Ramana, diary, 29th August, 1949) narrates an amusing incident surrounding the composition of one of these verses:

Sri Maharshi composed a verse in Tamil over which an English lady-devotee grew very jubilant and looked forward to reading it in English translation, taking it to be a hymn in praise of the Lord of Creation. It turned out to be a laxative recipe, which Maharshi had written with his own hand in ten long lines. Bhagavan is bubbling with joy over it and is showing it to everybody like a schoolboy who has written his first poem.

The Power of the Presence

simple, nutritious diet for both the prevention and the cure of common ailments.

On one occasion I informed Sri Bhagavan that I had only eaten kanji<sup>3</sup> for lunch since I had dysentery and didn't want to provoke my stomach too much. Sri Bhagavan showed his approval of my choice of remedy and then spoke highly of the efficacy of a kanji that was made from rice water, dried ginger, coriander and rock salt. Given my condition, I was pleasantly surprised when Sri Bhagavan told me that kanji was about to appear on the ashram menu. Sri Bhagavan rarely indicated his preferences when food was about to be served to him, but he had been heard to extol the virtues of kanji so highly, the cooks had decided to prepare some. Sri Bhagavan liked a simple diet himself, but the cooks and the devotees who supplied him with food generally insisted on giving him more elaborate dishes since they felt that serving very simple dishes showed a lack of devotion.

T. P. R. sitting with Bhagavan around 1930.

After telling me about this recipe for kanji, Sri Bhagavan remarked, 'People do not realise how wholesome kanji is, and how tasty. The simple dishes are the best. When I lived on the hill, Keerai Patti used to collect leaves from the hill and prepare whole meals out of them. Even though she was half blind, she would locate them on the hill and make delicious dishes out of them. In those days we would make kanji plus one vegetable dish from everything that was available. None of the fine dishes they make here now can equal the simple fare we enjoyed then. People here do not realise how much enjoyment there is in such a meal.'

---

<sup>3</sup> Kanji is a gruel or porridge that is made by boiling rice until the separate grains disintegrate and coalesce.

‘People who eat rich dishes all the time have no appreciation of how a poor man loves and enjoys his simple food. He comes home hungry after a hard day’s work in the fields, and when he sits down for his meal, down goes one huge fistful after another until it looks as though he might swallow the plate as well. On the other hand, a rich man sits down to a meal with all sorts of delicacies served on expensive plates and then nibbles and sips, without relishing anything. Mostly, he derives no satisfaction from the rich fare that is spread in front of him.

‘Even after we came down here, after leaving Skandashram, we still used to make kanji, often for the workers who were helping us. In the beginning of our stay here we employed many men to clear the cacti and level the land. We used to prepare a midday meal for them in addition to giving them daily wages. For all of us we only used to prepare two dishes: a huge pot of kanji and another of all the vegetables we happened to have on hand. You can imagine the quantity when I tell you that the ladle we stirred it with was the branch of a tree. In those days I used to do all the grinding for the cooking. Once I made a kind of uppuma out of leaves and ravai [pulverised wheat grains]. It was seven parts leaves and one part ravai.<sup>4</sup> Everyone enjoyed it, but when I told them what it was and how it was made, they were not so happy. People like to think that they are eating something elaborate and expensive.’

We all worried about Sri Bhagavan’s health, particularly in the last few years of his life when it was clear to everyone that he was getting increasingly feeble and debilitated, but Bhagavan himself was mostly indifferent to the various pains and problems that his body attracted. If he had any concern at all, it was that his assorted body problems might be an inconvenience to the devotees who had come to see him. Even then, he was most unwilling to take any treatment. One day, for example, Bhagavan vomited in his leaf plate in the dining room. He got up immediately and went out. Just at that moment I entered the hall, having come straight from the railway station.

On seeing me Bhagavan said without any preliminaries, ‘See <sup>4</sup> A conventional uppuma would be predominantly ravai with a few fried vegetables and spices mixed in.

---

The Power of the Presence

what has happened! I vomited in my plate in the dining room. I could not control myself. How obnoxious! I don't know how much inconvenience I must have caused to everyone there.' There was a clear note of sadness in his voice.

'At such times it is good to drink lemon juice or orange juice,' I suggested.

'Who will bring me such things?' asked Bhagavan helplessly. 'Who will bring a lemon or an orange now?'

'Why, don't you have any?' I asked Krishnaswami, his attendant, who was standing next to him.

Krishnaswami remembered that someone had brought a dozen oranges that day.

'They are kept in the storeroom,' he said. 'I will bring them.'

Even though Bhagavan was physically distressed, he still displayed his usual frugality and his sense of equality.

Bhagavan walking in Palakottu with Krishnaswami

'Bring only one orange,' he said. 'Give half of that to Bhagavan, a quarter to Krishnaswami and the other quarter to Ramachandra Iyer.'

Krishnaswami ignored the instruction and brought three oranges, but Bhagavan did not notice. One was cut and I was given a third of it.

After receiving my share I said, 'Bhagavan, I should get three-quarters of an orange, but I have only been given a third.'

I thought this was the best way of telling Bhagavan that there were three oranges and that we expected him to eat one and a half himself.

'What!' he exclaimed.

'Krishnaswami has brought three oranges,' I said, pointing to them.

The other two were also distributed. After eating his share Bhagavan began to feel comfortable and leaned back, closing his eyes. Nobody on this occasion had bothered to see what had happened to Bhagavan after he vomited. No one even tried to enquire if he needed any help. But Bhagavan, showing his usual consideration, was worrying whether his vomiting had caused any inconvenience to others.<sup>5</sup>

Who knows what is really happening between Bhagavan

---

<sup>5</sup> Bhagavan was initially reluctant to eat the oranges at all. The following account of the incident comes from Day By Day With Bhagavan, 11th September, 1946. In this version the attendant is Rangaswami. It is possible that both attendants were on duty and with Bhagavan at the time:

It seems that Rangaswami was trying to coax Bhagavan into eating an orange about noon and, when he told Bhagavan, 'These oranges and other fruits are all brought by devotees only so that Bhagavan may use them. So why should not Bhagavan use them?'

It seems Bhagavan replied, 'Why should you think that I eat only when I eat with this mouth? I eat through a thousand mouths.' Rangaswami told me of this.

Today Mr T. P. Ramachandra Iyer arrived from Madras. Bhagavan said on seeing him, 'You have gone down very much. You look a different man.'

The Power of the Presence

and his devotees? We should be extremely wary about trying to interpret events such as these because Bhagavan usually acted in response to the states of mind of the devotees around him. Since we do not know what is passing through the minds of devotees as they sit or stand in Bhagavan's presence, we cannot really ever be sure that we understand why Bhagavan responds to them in the way he does.

His attitude towards giving out teachings illustrates this very well. A lot of people are under the impression that Bhagavan talked advaitic philosophy all the time and prescribed self-enquiry to everyone who asked for his advice. This is simply not so: Bhagavan gave out different advice to different people. He would see their level of development and their temperament and react accordingly. One devotee might ask a question and be given an answer. If another devotee asked the same question a few minutes later, he might give a different answer, so different in fact that it would contradict the first one. If each of these devotees acted on Bhagavan's advice, with full faith in its efficacy, each would find that Bhagavan's grace was flowing into him.

I can give a good illustration of Bhagavan's giving out contradictory advice by recounting two incidents that happened in the hall. A blind devotee called Kannappa once came to Bhagavan.

While talking about this Kannappa, Sri Bhagavan remarked, 'Those who listen to his singing will forget the difference between day and night'.

'Then why does he not sing?' I asked.

Kannappa then sang some songs from the Tiruppugazh of Arunagirinatha. His singing was very sweet and his devotion brought tears to our eyes. We completely forgot ourselves. Soon afterwards the bell rang for lunch. Sri Bhagavan got up and

---

T. P. R. said, 'My foot became swollen. The doctors couldn't diagnose it properly. Besides, I have had a lot of strain.'

Bhagavan is criticised by some as being so impersonal and abstracted that he cannot appeal to most people. I record this instance to refute such criticism. That one remark of Bhagavan must have meant so much to T. P. R. Many others, including myself, have had such proofs of love and attention from Bhagavan.

rubbed his knees. Before he had a chance to leave, I told him how impressed I had been with the singing.

‘How beautifully he sang! What melody and what devotion!’

‘Not only that, he can imitate anyone,’ replied Bhagavan as he was crossing the hall.

Before he left he turned back towards me and added, ‘Yes, he sang beautifully. But what is it to us? If we get immersed in that devotion we will be carried away. Then it will be difficult for us to get out of it.’

On another occasion the famous singer Sri Dilip Kumar Roy came from Pondicherry and sang beautifully before Sri Bhagavan.

When the bell rang for lunch, Sri Roy put down his instrument, put his palms together in a gesture of respect and said to Bhagavan, ‘I do not practise any yoga, nor do I know any philosophy. All I know is singing. My heart and my emotions have merged in this music. I want to reach God’s feet by following this path. Do I have any hope? All I have is this little devotion, and that too I get only through singing.’

Bhagavan replied, ‘Yes, it is enough. It will take you to higher levels.’

When I translated these words for Sri Roy, he felt so buoyed up by them, he touched Bhagavan’s feet again and again.

After he had left the hall Bhagavan turned towards me and said, ‘Bhakti is the mother of jnana. Tell him that.’

I called to Roy and translated this additional remark for him.

T. P. R. standing next to Bhagavan on Arunachala

The Power of the Presence

It pleased him so much, he again repeatedly touched Bhagavan's feet.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> A few days before this incident Dilip Kumar Roy himself spoke to Bhagavan about the difference between bhakti and jnana:

[Dilip Kumar Roy] asked Bhagavan, 'In Maha Yoga you say that the sages have not said anything to contradict each other. Yet we find one advocating bhakti, another jnana, etc., leading thus to all kinds of quarrels.'

Bhagavan [replied]: 'There is really nothing contradictory in such teachings. When for instance a follower of bhakti marga declares that bhakti is the best, he really means by the word bhakti what the jnana marga man calls jnana. There is no difference in the state or its description by attributes or transcendence of attributes. Only different thinkers have used different words. All these different margas or paths or sadhanas lead to the same goal. When that happens, dhyana, bhakti or jnana, which were at one time a conscious and painful effort, become the normal and natural state, spontaneously and without effort.' (Day By Day With Bhagavan, 29th October, 1945.)

A few days later, on the morning of 2nd November, Dilip Kumar Roy sang a few songs and then asked Bhagavan to tell him which path he should follow:

'What is the best way of killing the ego?'

[Bhagavan replied,] 'To ask the mind to kill the mind is like making the thief the policeman. He will go with you and pretend to catch the thief, but nothing will be gained. So you must turn inward and see where the mind rises from and then it will cease to exist.'

'To each person that way is the best which appears easiest or appeals most. All the ways are equally good, as they lead to the same goal, which is the merging of the ego in the Self. What the bhakta calls surrender, the man who does vichara calls jnana. Both are trying to take the ego back to the source from which it sprang and make it merge there.'

[Dilip Kumar Roy,] 'But which is the best way for me? Bhagavan must know.'

[Devaraja Mudaliar comments:] Bhagavan did not reply. This is only usual with Bhagavan. He leaves it to each devotee to find

In Kannappa's case Sri Bhagavan cautioned us against devotional emotion, whereas in Roy's case he said that bhakti was enough. Bhagavan had the ability to discern which path would benefit each devotee. He would encourage us all to follow the path he knew would be easiest for us, and in the process he would occasionally discourage us from digressing into other forms of sadhana.

I can remember another occasion when Bhagavan made a remark that was so unusual, it was clearly meant for one devotee alone. When the ashram Post Office was opened, a high official of the postal department, whose only son had died, came with his wife to the ashram. He spoke to Bhagavan about his loss.

'After his death we have known neither happiness nor peace. We have been wandering aimlessly ever since. We have only one desire left, but our attachment to it is deep. Can we see our son in our next birth?'

Everyone in the hall laughed.

On hearing us react in this way, the official said, 'I have never been to any ashram before, nor do I know how to talk to mahatmas. If what I said was wrong, please excuse me.'

Bhagavan, who had been leaning back on his sofa, sat up and spoke to him.

'First learn the proper meaning and relationship of father, son and rebirth. If you know this, you can then think of the next birth.'

The gentleman raised an objection.

'Bhagavan, I know nothing about all these things, nor do I

---

out what sadhana appears most easy to him. (Day By Day With Bhagavan, 2nd November and 11th November, 1945.)

It seems Bhagavan finally recommended that Dilip Kumar Roy follow the bhakti path later that day. T. P. Ramachandra Iyer has Bhagavan giving out this advice privately to him in the hall around lunch time. Devaraja Mudaliar has Bhagavan giving the advice publicly in the hall later that day. It would seem from these reports that Bhagavan, following his usual practice, first recommended self-enquiry, but when he realised that Dilip Kumar Roy was more inclined towards the devotional approach, gave him his permission to follow the path of bhakti.

T. P. R. sitting with Bhagavan on the lower slopes of Arunachala.

need them. I never bother about jnana or renunciation. Just tell me this. I do not expect anything more from you. Will I be able to see my son in my next birth?’

Bhagavan leaned forward, raised his hands, as if to assure the man, and replied, ‘Yes, you will see him. In your next birth you will see your son as clearly as you saw him in this birth.’

This remark made the man extremely happy.

‘Yes, Bhagavan,’ he said, ‘that is what I wanted.’

He touched Bhagavan’s feet many times and went away in a very contented mood.

After he had left I said, ‘Bhagavan, why did you speak like this? How is it possible?’

Bhagavan replied, ‘What can I do? If I had not spoken in this way, his faith would have been shattered to its foundations.'

I was still sceptical. To clear my doubts, Bhagavan asked me to get a copy of the Bhagavad Gita. He showed me the following verse and asked me to read it.

Knowledge should be given according to one's ability to grasp it. If we teach philosophy to those who are not ready to receive it, their faith will be totally shattered.

In such cases it is relatively easy to understand why Bhagavan behaved in a particular way. But there were exchanges in the hall that were far more mysterious and which may never be explained. One man, for example, came all the way from America to see Bhagavan. He sat in front of him for three hours and then went away with no intention of coming back.

I asked Bhagavan, 'What is this? He came here all the way from such a far-off place and stayed only for three hours. What did he learn?'

Bhagavan replied, 'He came for a particular purpose. He had my darshan and I had his darshan. His mission was over. Why should he stay any longer?'

I doubt if anyone will ever know what happened during those three hours. The man himself left without even leaving his name, and Bhagavan declined to make any further comment on the incident.

Some aspects of Bhagavan's character never changed, irrespective of who he was dealing with. He abhorred waste of any kind; he was unusually considerate to the animals that lived near him, and he could always be depended on to insist that any food donations be shared out equally amongst all those present in the ashram. These habits were deeply ingrained and they were never influenced by the fluctuating minds of the people around him. Another habit, which was equally constant but less well known, was his insistence that the ashram should never ask visitors or devotees for money. Instead, he expected the ashram to be run on voluntary contributions. Chinnaśwami was aware of Bhagavan's attitude to money, but he could not resist occasionally asking for money when money was needed. I witnessed one dramatic episode of this kind in the 1940s.

Sitting with Bhagavan near the ashram's cowshed. T. P. R. is in the front row, to Bhagavan's right. Chinnaśwami is behind him, on his (T. P. R.'s) right.

The Mother's Temple was being built in the ashram, but there was an acute shortage of funds. Money was needed immediately. At that time a devotee called Chhaganlal Yogi came from Bombay for the first time.

When Chinnaśwami saw him he told me, 'We need Rs 50,000 for the temple. So why don't the three of us go to Jamnalal Bajaj and ask him for the money? You should introduce me to Chhaganlal Yogi so that we can begin.'

Chhaganlal Yogi found the proposal to be unacceptable, but since he was a newcomer and was feeling rather shy, he felt that he had no alternative but to accept. Chinnaśwami himself arranged for his luggage to be sent, but before we could depart we had to cross the hurdle of informing Bhagavan. Chinnaśwami never came before Bhagavan to speak. If he needed to give information to Bhagavan, he always used to send someone else to convey it. On this occasion he called me and asked me to tell Bhagavan about our journey.

Beginning the consecration of the Mother's Temple in 1949. Mouni Swami is standing behind Bhagavan.

‘How can I tell Bhagavan about such a thing?’ I asked. ‘You must also come with me.’

Since he did not even have the courage to convey the information in my company, I collected some other devotees and went to see Bhagavan while he was having his afternoon rest. Bhagavan, who was alone in the hall, was gazing into space. We stood before him for some time, but he did not even bother to look at us.

Each one of us wanted one of the others to speak. Eventually, Mouni Swami spoke on our behalf, telling Bhagavan what we had come for.

For a long time Bhagavan made no reply, but at last he turned to us and said, ‘I have already told you not to beg in my name.

The Power of the Presence

Now I am telling you again. Be satisfied with what you have. What is to happen will happen.

‘If you now go and ask for money, will not the donors ask you whether you took my consent or not and whether I gave you permission for this? What do you intend to tell them if they ask questions like this?’

Chhaganlal Yogi had found the excuse he was looking for.

‘Unless we tell them that you consented to this, none of them will give even a paisa [a sixty-fourth of a rupee],’ he said.

What could they do? One by one they slipped out of the hall and Chinnaswami’s journey was cancelled.

After this incident Bhagavan remarked, ‘Did all these buildings in the ashram come up as a result of my begging? It all happened in the way it had to happen. Nothing happens purely as a result of personal effort.’

The temple was eventually constructed over the samadhi of Bhagavan’s mother on a grand scale. It was a massive and impressive building that was constructed in the traditional way by skilled temple workers. Though Bhagavan fully supported the building project in all its phases, it seems that he did not envisage that such a building would come into existence at the time the Mother passed away. This became clear to me when Bhagavan told me a little-known story about the Mother’s samadhi that showed how destiny must always take its appointed course.

When Bhagavan’s mother died in 1922, he apparently said to some devotees at Skandashram, ‘Take this body in the dark without making any noise and without anybody knowing about it. Make a pit in no-man’s land. Bury it quickly and come back soon before dawn.’<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> I asked Kunju Swami, who took an active part in the funeral arrangements of Bhagavan’s mother, whether anyone had attempted to carry out this instruction. This was his reply:

It wasn’t practical. There was a lot of work to do and many things to arrange. We needed to get the permission of the village officer and also the permission of the Bavaji Math that owned the land on which the samadhi pit was to be dug. The mother’s body did

The body was brought down the hill. While the devotees were having a lengthy discussion about where the body was to be buried, word of the burial spread in the town and many people came. The devotees eventually selected a site, buried the body and constructed a samadhi over it. For several days food was cooked and distributed there amongst the poor.

Chinnaswami started coming down the hill daily to perform puja at the Mother's samadhi and to make offerings there. Some of the other devotees sometimes accompanied him. Occasionally, even Bhagavan himself came down. One day a thatched shed was erected as a shelter for him. This was the beginning of Sri Ramanasramam.

In later years Bhagavan once remarked, 'I suggested that the body be buried silently before dawn. But things happened in the way they had to happen. See how many constructions have come up where a body was buried silently!'

There was one other occasion when I heard Bhagavan say that the development of the Mother's Temple was all part of the unfolding of destiny. A new palanquin, which was meant to take the deity round the Mother's temple, had been brought and placed before Bhagavan. It was shown to Bhagavan and then taken away. I asked Bhagavan what it was.

'Oh, don't you know?' he replied. 'It is the palanquin for the deity. They will carry Mother's idol around the temple in it.' After pausing for some time he added, 'Not only that, they are also getting an umbrella made for the deity.'

I wondered out loud: 'Umbrella! What umbrella?'

'The same kind of umbrella that is held over Lord Arunachaleswara during his processions. Here it is to be held over not leave Skandashram till shortly before dawn. It was impossible to get all these things done before daybreak. Also, we wanted to do it properly. There is a tradition that if you bury a jnani's body in ordinary earth, it will be bad for any nearby town. It is equally bad if you cremate it. In Mother's case a special deep pit was made and lined with stones. This is the correct way, and it takes time. In Tirumular's Tirumantiram it says that a jnani's body must be buried in a pit that has been lined with stones. This is what we did.

---

The Power of the Presence

the deity in the temple. Chinnaswami is completely obsessed with the Mother and decorations for her. But everything will happen as it is destined to happen. Let us be mere onlookers.’<sup>8</sup>

An incident that took place during the construction of this temple once precipitated an astonishing show of grace from Sri Bhagavan. It clearly shows how Sri Bhagavan was aware of all our thoughts and it also shows how he could respond to our prayers if our devotion and faith were strong enough.

In 1945 Bhagavan either dislocated his big toe or severely sprained it. The ashram doctor recommended that Bhagavan restrict his movements for one month. He was advised only to walk between the dining room, the hall and his bathroom. Towards the end of that period, Venkatarama Iyer and I went up to him and greeted him as he was leaving the dining room. When Bhagavan asked what we had come for, we asked for his permission to go to Skandashram.

‘All right,’ he said, ‘you can go.’ Then, turning towards Rangaswami, his attendant, he asked with wistful eagerness, ‘Shall we also go?’

Rangaswami was horrified. The sun was at its hottest and Bhagavan’s toe had not yet fully healed.

‘How can you do it, Swami?’ he asked. ‘You are not yet cured and you are still very weak.’<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> In Tamil culture an umbrella is often a symbol of power and authority, not just a defence against the weather. When Bhagavan wrote in Arunachala Ashtakam, verse seven, ‘The Sovereign Lord under the shade of a single umbrella’, he was alluding to the omnipotence and the universal sovereignty of God.

<sup>9</sup> The original Telugu version of this story in Bhagavan Smritulu states that Bhagavan was suffering from a broken collar-bone, rather than a dislocated toe. I think Chalam, the compiler of that book, is mixing up two different accidents that Bhagavan had in the 1940s. Bhagavan did break his collar-bone in April 1942 when he tripped while trying to prevent a cat from attacking a squirrel. The injury to his toe occurred in August 1945. I have therefore taken the liberty of substituting ‘toe’ for ‘collar-bone’ in the story that follows.

A standard remedial measure for those who have broken or dislocated their big toe is to have a piece of wood about an inch thick, an inch wide

Bhagavan looked at us like a helpless child and asked, 'Won't you take us along with you?'

'Bhagavan,' I answered, 'If you want to accompany us, who could deny himself such a pleasure? But what about your physical condition? How can you possibly come?'

'It seems that they will not take me,' said Bhagavan regretfully to Rangaswami.

Venkatarama Iyer and I began to climb the hill towards Skandashram. When we looked behind us we saw that Rangaswami and Bhagavan were also coming up the hill.

Rangaswami called out to us, 'Don't worry, we are not coming with you!'

Bhagavan usually went up the hill every day, but while his toe was healing his doctors had forbidden him to walk further than and about three inches long attached to their footwear across the ball of the foot. This keeps the toe off the ground during walking. The ankle can still articulate, but the big-toe joint remains in a flat plane. Since Bhagavan never wore footwear of any kind, this option was not available to him. Without such an aid, walking would have been extremely painful for the first week or so after the accident. The walk from Ramanasramam to Skandashram is about a mile and it involves a vertical ascent of about 600 feet, all of it over uneven terrain. The current well-paved path to Skandashram had not been constructed at this time. The attendants were right to be shocked when Bhagavan announced that he intended to climb the hill in this condition.

---

This injury came on top of Bhagavan's already existing rheumatic problems, which were making it increasingly difficult for him to walk. The following excerpt from Day By Day With Bhagavan (6th November, 1945) was recorded a few weeks after the incident that T. P. Ramachandra Iyer is narrating:

A little before Bhagavan was about to start for his evening stroll a young man approached Bhagavan and said that his companion had lost his eyesight. Bhagavan nodded, as usual. Soon after Bhagavan got up and told us, 'He says he has lost his eyes. I have lost my legs. He comes and tells me. To whom am I to go and complain?' For nearly a month or more Bhagavan has been having more than usual trouble with his legs, either due to rheumatism or deficiency of B vitamin.

Bhagavan on the path to Skandashram with his attendant Rangaswami (centre) and T. P. R. (left) the ashram dining room. When I saw Bhagavan coming towards us, I assumed that he had decided to resume his daily walk on the lower slopes of the hill.

We accompanied Bhagavan and Rangaswami for some time, but when we left them in order to continue our walk to Skandashram, Rangaswami ran up to us and said, 'After Bhagavan goes back to the hall to rest, I shall come with you. Please don't go any further. Stay somewhere near here and wait for me.'

We climbed a short distance up the hill and sat there in a shady place. An hour passed but Rangaswami did not arrive. Eventually we saw a man coming up. As he approached us we saw that he was the Skandashram watchman and that he was carrying food for a sadhu who lived there. As he passed us we asked him whether anyone else was climbing the hill. He said 'No' in a somewhat uncertain tone, so we stopped him and asked him again. After some hesitation he said in a whisper that Bhagavan was coming up the hill, accompanied by Rangaswami.

Bhagavan in that hot sun! I asked Venkatarama Iyer to sit there

Bhagavan on the hill with T. P. R. (left) and Rangaswami (right)

while I ran down to meet them. When I found them I saw that Bhagavan was tired and that he was also sweating profusely in the hot sun. He was crawling slowly over the stones and the sharp edges of the pebbles were rupturing the skin on his palms and feet. In his month of inactivity Bhagavan had lost the habit of walking, so much so that he was finding it extremely difficult to climb the hill. His big toe had not yet healed properly, but even so he did not agree when we proposed to take him down the hill. Since he was determined to carry on, Rangaswami and I caught hold of him on either side and helped him to climb the hill. After a long struggle we reached Skandashram at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Power of the Presence

By then Bhagavan was utterly exhausted. He lay down on a stone slab, gasping for breath.

An ashram worker who was whitewashing and cleaning Skandashram came, prostrated before Bhagavan and said, 'What a fortunate day for me! The all-merciful Bhagavan came up the hill all this way to give me darshan.'

I thought that Bhagavan would recover if we gave him something to drink, but what was available in such an isolated place?

The man said that he would go down the hill and bring something but Bhagavan stopped him and asked, 'Is there no porridge in your bowl?'

The man went and saw that there was nothing left in his bowl except a few dried pieces that were sticking to the sides. He had drunk the remainder earlier that day. We wet the sides of the pot, mixed the dried porridge with water and gave the resulting liquid to Bhagavan. It revived him and he soon recovered.

Down the hill in the ashram the doors of Bhagavan's hall were opened at 3 o'clock. When it was discovered that Bhagavan was not there, people ran in all directions looking for him. One of them came to Skandashram, arriving just as Bhagavan was narrating to us the story of how he used to beg for his food in town.

'In those days,' he said, 'I used to walk without even a bowl in my hand. If anyone gave me anything, I used to take it in my hands, eat or drink it, and then clean my hands with my hair and walk away. There was not a single street in which I did not wander and beg.'

'Did everyone give food?' I asked.

'Some used to keep food and wait for me. Others used to give if anything was left over. Some people used to scold me, saying, "You are very strong, why don't you work?" These people used to chase me away.'

'Did you not feel bad when you were treated like this?' I asked.

'Why should I?' he replied. 'I used to go away with a smile.'<sup>10</sup>

The man who had come up looking for us went back down the hill to inform those in the ashram that he had found Bhagavan. The man who was whitewashing left temporarily. He went down the hill and came back with some puffed rice and dhāl for us to eat. Seeing Bhagavan had obviously made him very happy.

---

<sup>10</sup> Bhagavan elaborated on this period of his life in the following conversation with T. P. Ramachandra Iyer, Devaraja Mudaliar and G. V. Subbaramayya (Day By Day With Bhagavan, 30th May, 1946):

Bhagavan turned to him and said, 'I came for you. Your prayer brought me here.'

I was astonished that Bhagavan had gone to so much trouble in the heat of the day merely to answer a prayer.

'What was his prayer?' I asked.

'Don't you know?' enquired Bhagavan.

When it became clear that we did not, he narrated the whole story.

---

In the afternoon T. P. Ramachandra Iyer remarked, 'Chadwick has a picture of Bhagavan in a recumbent posture where Bhagavan looks a mere skeleton. I don't think anyone else has such a picture.'

I [Devaraja Mudaliar] said, 'It must have been taken at the time when Bhagavan was purposely under-eating'.

Bhagavan said, 'Yes, for some time when I was at Skandashram I used to take only one meal at 11 a.m. and nothing else. At that time I got very thin.'

In connection with this, G. V. S. asked Bhagavan about his early days and whether he ever went about accepting alms. Then Bhagavan related how it was T. P. Ramachandra Iyer's father who first took him by sheer force to his house and fed him, and how the first time he begged for food was from Chinna Gurukal's wife. He went on to tell how after that he freely begged in almost all the streets of Tiruvannamalai.

He said, 'You cannot conceive of the majesty and dignity I felt while so begging. The first day, when I begged from Gurukal's wife, I felt bashful about it as a result of habits of upbringing, but after that there was absolutely no feeling of abasement. I felt like a king, and more than a king. I have sometimes received stale gruel at some house and taken it without salt or any other flavouring, in the open street, before great pandits and other important men who used to come and prostrate themselves before me, then wiped my hands on my head and passed on supremely happy and in a state of mind in which even emperors were mere straw in my sight. You can't imagine it. It is because there is such a path that we find tales in history of kings giving up their thrones and taking to this path.'

The Power of the Presence

A hall was being built for Bhagavan in front of Mother's Temple. Four days previously the ashram priests had decided to do a puja to bless and sanctify four pillars that had recently been erected there. On that day, with the doctor's consent, the temple architect had taken Bhagavan and had made him sit before the pillars. A big crowd collected there to watch. Our hero, the whitewashing man, was also in the crowd.

After the puja, when Bhagavan was going away, it seems that he thought, 'Those who build this temple are important people, so Bhagavan came to see their work. How will Bhagavan see my work and devotion in Skandashram? It is a long distance for him to walk. Why should he come now?'

After narrating this story Bhagavan answered his prayer by inspecting his work.

A little later he came back and said to us, 'A message will soon come from the ashram asking me to come back. Let us ignore it. We can spend the night here. At 1 a.m., after the moon has risen, we can slowly go down to the town, see the newly whitewashed temple gopuram in moonlight, and then go back to the ashram without making much noise.'

Bhagavan spoke like an absconding school child involved in a great conspiracy.

What else do we want except to be with him? However, the plan was not carried out because as soon as it became known that Bhagavan was on the hill, all the people in the ashram came up to see him. At six o'clock a big crowd had assembled. We were very disappointed that our overnight programme could not be carried out, but in a last attempt to salvage it, we asked all the devotees to go down to Ramanasramam. None of them moved.

Bhagavan standing at the bottom of the courtyard steps in Skandashram on his 1945 visit. Rangaswami is to his left and T. P. R. is in the rear.

'It is getting dark,' I said. 'There are some snakes here. So please go back to the ashram.'

'When our lamp [Bhagavan] is here, where is the darkness for us?' said Rukmini Amma.

I tried to frighten the devotees with stories of tigers and wolves. I tried to tell them that being stranded on the hill in total darkness with no food would be dangerous, but no one was inclined to believe me. Or if they did, they were prepared to risk all the dangers so long as Bhagavan was with them.

Bhagavan knew that it was pointless to argue any more. He got up and we went down via the eastern slope of the hill. We reached the ashram at about 9 p.m. that night.

[Editor's note: Bhagavan's visit to Skandashram took place on 27th September, 1945. Devaraja Mudaliar's description of the visit, taken from Day By Day With Bhagavan, reveals what a unique event it was:]

Bhagavan suddenly seems to have felt like visiting Skandashram where for about a week now repairs are being done; and so without notice to anybody, after the midday meal, Bhagavan, on his usual after-lunch stroll, wended his way towards Skandashram, followed by attendant Rangaswami. Few knew about this till about 3.30 p.m. But after 3.30 the news gradually spread, and almost all the devotees went up to Skandashram and found Bhagavan seated on the terraced platform in front, which overlooks the temple and town. We found Bhagavan in very good spirits and relating various events and incidents that happened during his stay there previous to his coming to Ramanasramam. Bhagavan had a mind even to continue stopping there and to spend the night there. But all the devotees had thronged there and none looked likely to move till Bhagavan moved. So at about 5.30 p.m. Bhagavan started, looked at the various parts of the ashram, telling us where he used to sleep, where he used to sit, where they cooked, where the old tap was, and so on, and then got down by the steps. On the way he visited Virupaksha Cave and explained about his life there also ... .

The Power of the Presence

It is a marvel that Bhagavan did this trip all on foot in this way, the more so because his left big toe had become either dislocated or badly sprained on 26th August and as a result thereof [he] is still having some pain there.

Since Bhagavan left Skandashram [in 1922], he had gone there two or three times within about a year or two after his settling down here. But after that, i.e. for nearly twenty-two years now, he has never gone there till today.

Bhagavan giving darshan to devotees at Skandashram in 1945.

Chhaganlal V. Yogi

A Personal Encounter

What does Sri Bhagavan mean to me? After many years of experiencing his grace I can now reply, 'He is everything to me. He is my Guru and my God.' I can say this with confidence because, had I not had the good fortune of seeing him and thereafter getting into closer contact with him, I would have been still groping in the dark. I would still have been a doubting Thomas.

How did it all begin? When I was eighteen I read a lot of books by Swami Vivekananda and Swami Rama Tirtha. This reading generated a desire in me that I should also become a sannyasin, like the authors of these books. Their writings also implanted in me the ideal of plain living, high thinking, and a life dedicated to spiritual matters. Somehow, my desire to become a sannyasin was never fulfilled, but the ideal of a dedicated life made a deeper and deeper impression on my mind. At the age of twenty I had the good fortune of contacting Mahatma Gandhi. His ideals won my heart and for several years I faithfully tried to put them into practice.

I was doing my duty to the best of my ability and leading, as best I could, a pure and dedicated life till the age of thirty-eight. Around that time scepticism began to assail me and my mind became a home for all kinds of doubts. I began to doubt the ideals of Gandhiji; I began to doubt sadhus and sannyasins; I doubted religion, and I began to doubt the existence of God.

The Power of the Presence

It was in this darkest period of my life that I first heard of Sri Ramana Maharshi. At that time I seemed to be heading swiftly towards total scepticism. The world appeared to me to be full of injustice, cruelty, greed, hate and other evils, the existence of which logically led me to a strong disbelief in God. For, I argued, had He truly existed, could anything dark or evil ever have flourished? Doubt upon doubt assailed me like dark shadows that dogged my footsteps. I had, as a consequence, lost whatever little reverence I might have had for sadhus and sannyasins. I found myself slowly but surely losing my interest in religion.

The very word itself eventually became a synonym in my mind for a clever ruse to delude the credulous of the world. In short, I began to live a life lacking in optimism and faith. I was not happy in my disbelief, for my mind took on the aspect of turbulent waters. I felt that all around me there was raging a scorching fire that seemed to burn up my very entrails.

One day, while travelling as usual on the train to the office, I happened to meet a friend who had spent over a decade in Europe and America. I hadn't met him for quite a long time and I sometimes used to wonder where he had disappeared to. In answer to a query about his recent activities he said that he had been to Sri Ramanasramam and immediately launched into a description of what went on there. While he was trying to describe to me his experience of the darshan of Sri Bhagavan, he drew out from his pocket a small packet that he extended to me. I wondered what it contained. He explained that it contained something extremely precious – some vibhuti, holy ashes brought from the ashram. He insisted on my accepting them. His kind invitation did not interest me in the least. On the other hand, it amused me.

I said, scornfully, 'Pardon me, but I think that all this sort of thing is mere sham and humbug, so I trust you will not misunderstand me if I refuse to accept'.

He then argued that by refusing his gift, I was not merely insulting him, I was also insulting the vibhuti.

I thought that this was rather comical, but to placate him I replied, 'Well, if that be so, to please you I will take a pinch of these ashes on condition that you will allow me to do whatever I like with them'.

Unsuspectingly, he nodded his head in assent and passed the packet over to me. A smile appeared on his lips as he watched me take a pinch out of it. This smile was the preface to a zealous lecture on Sri Bhagavan and his miraculous greatness. While he was lost in his missionary enthusiasm, I surreptitiously let the ashes fall onto the floor of the compartment. To be quite frank, it was a relief when my friend had concluded what I had then considered to be a puerile and unnecessary lecture.

At the end of it I remarked, 'I have an utter contempt for these so-called saints'.

My friend refused to give up. He insisted on impressing on me that Sri Ramana Maharshi was not a 'so-called' saint, but an authentic sage, acknowledged as such by great savants all over the world. He suggested that for my own benefit I read about him in some of the available literature. To start me off he gave me a book entitled Sri Maharshi that had been written by Sri Kamath, the editor of The Sunday Times in Madras.

I must confess that despite my prejudices the book evoked in me an interest in Sri Bhagavan. After completing this small book, I was sufficiently curious to borrow another book about him from a different friend. It was the second edition of Self-Realization, the earliest full-length biography of Sri Bhagavan. From then on, my interest grew without my being aware of it. A little later I felt compelled to write to Sri Ramanasramam to ask for all the literature on Sri Bhagavan that was available in English. As I began to study it with great avidity, I found that my outlook on life began to undergo a subtle transformation, but only a partial one. At the back of my mind there still lurked a heavy doubt, resembling a cloud, that stained the gathering illumination. My old scepticism did not wish to yield place so easily to this new faith, which was apparently being inculcated in my mind.

My scepticism tried to challenge my new faith by arguing, 'So many books are wonderful to read, but their authors, more often than not, are not as wonderful to know. It is possible for men to teach truths that they are unable to live themselves. What, then, is the use of books, however wonderful?’

Bhagavan sitting on his sofa in the old hall.

To counter this doubt I decided to correspond directly with Sri Bhagavan. Over the next few months I wrote several letters to him, all of which were answered by his ashram with a rare punctuality. However, although they breathed the teachings of the Master, they hardly gave me a glimpse into the nature of the daily life lived by him. Because of this I began to be haunted by a desire to visit the ashram to see for myself what went on there.

To fulfil that desire I paid my first visit to Sri Ramanasramam in the Christmas holidays of 1939. At first I was terribly disappointed because nothing seemed to strike me in the way I had expected. I found Sri Bhagavan seated on a couch, as quiet and unmoving as a statue. His presence did not seem to emanate anything unusual, and I was very disappointed to discover that he displayed no interest in me at all. I had expected warmth and intimacy, but unfortunately I seemed to be in the presence of someone who lacked both. From morning till evening I sat, waiting to catch a glimpse of his grace, of his interest in me, a stranger who had come all the way from Bombay, but I evoked no response. Sri Bhagavan merely seemed cold and unaffected. After pinning such hopes on him, his apparent lack of interest nearly broke my heart. Eventually, I decided to leave the ashram, knowing full well that if I did so, I would be more sceptical and hard-headed than before.

The Veda parayana was chanted every evening in Sri Bhagavan's presence. It was considered to be one of the most attractive items in the daily programme of the ashram, but in my depressed state it fell flat on my ears. It was the evening of the day I had decided to leave. The sun was setting like a sad farewell, spreading a darkness over both the hill and my heart. The gloom deepened until the neighbourhood disappeared into the blackness of the night. In my sensitive state the electric light that was switched on in the hall seemed like a living wound on the body of the darkness. My mind, which was deeply tormented, felt that the psychic atmosphere in the hall was stuffy and choking. Unable to bear it any longer, I walked outside to get a breath of fresh air.

A young man called Gopalan came up to me and asked me where I had come from.

'Bombay,' I replied.

He asked me if I had been introduced to the Master, and when I replied that I had not, he was most surprised. He immediately led me to the office, introduced me to the sarvadhikari [manager] and then proceeded with me to the hall where he introduced me to Sri Bhagavan. When he heard my name Sri Bhagavan's eyes turned to me, looked straight into mine and twinkled like stars. With a smile beaming with grace he asked me if I were a Gujarati. I replied that I was. Immediately he sent for a copy of the Gujarati translation by Sri Kishorelal Mashruwala of Upadesa Saram, a few copies of which had only just arrived. He then asked me to chant the Gujarati verses from the book.

'But I am not a singer,' I answered, hesitating to begin. But when it became clear that I was expected to perform, I got over my initial hesitation and began to chant verses from the book. I had sung about fifteen when the bell for the evening meal rang. All the time I was chanting I could feel Sri Bhagavan keenly observing me. It seemed that the light of his eyes was suffusing my consciousness, even without my being aware of it. His silent gaze brought about a subtle but definite transformation in me. The darkness, which a few minutes before had seemed heavy and unbearable, gradually lightened and melted into a glow of well-being. My erstwhile sadness completely disappeared, leaving in my heart an inexplicable emotion of joy. My limbs appeared to have been washed in an ocean-tide of freedom.

The Power of the Presence

That evening I sat close to Sri Bhagavan in the dining room. In my exalted state the food I ate seemed to have an unusual and unearthly taste. I quite literally felt that I was participating in some heavenly meal in the direct presence of God. After having such an experience, I of course abandoned all thought of leaving the ashram that night. I stayed on for three days longer in order to widen the sacred and extraordinary experience that had already begun, an experience of divine grace that I felt would lead me in the direction of spiritual liberation.

During the three days of my stay in the proximity of the Divine Master, I found my whole outlook entirely changed. After that short period I could find little evidence of my old self, a self that had been tied down with all kinds of preconceptions and prejudices. I felt that I had lost the chains that bind the eyes of true vision. I became aware that the whole texture of my mind had undergone a change. The colours of the world seemed different, and even the ordinary daylight took on an ethereal aspect. I began to see the foolishness and the futility of turning my gaze only on the dark side of life.

In those few days Sri Bhagavan, the divine magician, opened up for me a strange new world of illumination, hope and joy. I felt that his presence on earth alone constituted sufficient proof that humanity, suffering and wounded because of its obstinate ignorance, could be uplifted and saved. For the first time I fully understood the significance of darshan.

While I lay in bed in the guest room of the ashram, the encounter that had taken place on the train in Bombay replayed itself in my mind. I recalled the blind audacity that had prompted me to drop the thrice-holy vibhuti in contempt onto the floor of the railway carriage. Today, even one speck of such vibhuti is a treasure to me, for prasad received from the Master is a form of grace that no wealth on earth may buy. Sometimes I even feel that I am not worthy enough to raise it to my eyelids and streak my forehead with it.

'O Master,' I thought to myself, 'what a miracle of transformation! Why did it take half a lifetime before I could meet you? Half a lifetime of blundering, of failing and falling. But I suppose, my Master, that you would say that time is a mental concept. For I feel that in your sight your bhaktas [devotees] have, throughout all time, always been with you and near you.'

As these thoughts were passing through my mind, I slowly fell into a deep sleep. The next morning I arose in a rejuvenated state. There was a new vigour in my limbs and an awareness that my heart was permeated with light. On the third day of my visit I sadly took leave of Sri Bhagavan. I was still human enough, still caught in the sense of time and space, for the parting to leave me with a feeling of aching and emptiness in the heart. But there was no despair. Something assured me that I would be returning to the feet of the Master sooner than I could imagine.

My intuition turned out to be correct. In the following years repeated visits seemed to be miraculously and easily arranged by the Master. He seemed to know that I felt an occasional need to be close to him physically. In the years that followed each succeeding visit deepened the light within, toned up my nerves and suffused my senses with an increasing experience of exhilaration.

The subtle and subconscious manner with which the Master toils at his children is amazing. There were times without number when I distinctly saw his hand, his mighty hand, extended to me when I stood in need of guidance. These occasions continually reminded me of his famous comment in Who am I?

He that has earned the grace of the Guru shall undoubtedly be saved and never forsaken, just as the prey that has fallen into the tiger's jaws will never be allowed to escape.

Printing Press Stories

In 1945 I decided to wind up my printing press in Bombay in order to go and settle at Sri Ramanasramam. I had no prearranged plan for closing down my business; I merely relied on Sri Bhagavan. And he in turn responded to my devout prayer.

The Power of the Presence

In the early hours of the morning, while I was still in my bed and only half awake, I saw a vision in which Sri Bhagavan appeared before me. By his side stood a gentleman whom I recognised as a friend of mine. He had neither been to the ashram nor had he ever exhibited any faith in Sri Bhagavan. The following conversation then took place between Sri Bhagavan and myself:

Bhagavan: You want to sell your press, don't you?

Me: Yes, Bhagavan, but I must find a buyer.

Bhagavan: (showing my friend standing by his side) Here is the buyer. He will buy your press, so sell it to him.

Me: Since Sri Bhagavan has been kind enough to show me the buyer, may he also favour me by stating the amount at which I should execute the sale?

Sri Bhagavan then showed me five figures that were shining on the opposite wall like a neon sign. The amount indicated to me was quite reasonable, neither low nor exorbitant.

Sri Bhagavan and my friend then disappeared from my sight and the vision ended. By itself the vision was astonishing enough, but there was more to come. When I entered my press that day at 11 a.m., my friend from the vision was waiting there for me. Of course, he had come to see me about some other work and had no idea that he had been singled out as a prospective buyer. Feeling that Sri Bhagavan had sent him to me, I told him about the vision that had come to me a few hours before. He listened to me very attentively.

When I had finished my tale he simply commented, 'I will buy your press at the price indicated by your Guru'.

There was no limit to my joy. My desire to sell was fulfilled by his grace and the sale was completed in less than a minute.

My original plan had been to sell all my property in Bombay and move directly to Sri Ramanasramam. However, when the devotees heard what I was planning to do, it was suggested to me that I could be of more use to the ashram in Bangalore. I was asked to start a printing press there that could execute all of Sri Ramanasramam's printing work. I agreed to the idea and soon found myself in Bangalore, looking for suitable premises.

I began to suspect that Sri Bhagavan had assisted the sale of my original press because he had work for me to do in Bangalore.

I was a stranger in the city but I soon located an old press that had been lying idle for the previous six months. It was for sale. I saw its proprietor and told him why I wished to buy his business. He agreed to sell it to me but we were unable to agree on a price. To break the deadlock I proposed that both of us should visit the ashram and suggested that we could talk about the deal after we had had Sri Bhagavan's darshan. I thought that since Sri Bhagavan wanted me to do this work in Bangalore, his darshan might help to lubricate the wheels of the transaction.

The owner agreed to the idea, so we set off together for Sri Ramanasramam. On our arrival, I took him into the holy presence of Sri Bhagavan and informed him that I proposed to buy the press of the gentleman who was accompanying me, and that I planned to do all the ashram's printing work there. Sri Bhagavan did not say anything; he just nodded his head.

Within a few hours of having had Sri Bhagavan's darshan, there was a wonderful change in the attitude of the owner of the press. He approached me and agreed to sell his press for whatever price I was willing to pay for it. I stated a reasonable amount since I did not want to exploit him, and he happily accepted my offer. When he had agreed to come and see Sri Bhagavan with me, he had made a stipulation that no business talks should take place at the ashram. However, after seeing Sri Bhagavan, he proposed that we settle our business immediately. We drafted and signed a sale agreement in the ashram itself and within a week of our visit the press came into my possession.

It was a fairly big press that enabled me to do all kinds of printing work in several languages. Because of the good facilities that were available there, I undertook to print ashram books in English, Tamil, Telugu, Hindi, Gujarati and Kannada.

The Power of the Presence

The press, which was given the name 'Aruna Press' by Sri Bhagavan himself, had been idle for six months. It needed a lot of work to get it functioning again, but by Sri Bhagavan's grace I was soon able to take up the ashram work that had been given to me.

The logo and address of Chhaganlal Yogi's Bangalore press, taken from the title page of The Golden Jubilee Souvenir.

In 1946, the devotees of Sri Bhagavan decided to celebrate a golden jubilee to commemorate Sri Bhagavan's fifty years at Arunachala. He had arrived on September 1st, 1896, and on that same date in 1946 the ashram proposed to mark the occasion by a number of special events, one of which was the publication of a book entitled The Golden Jubilee Souvenir. The printing of this souvenir was entrusted to my press. Up till then, the press had only printed small books for the ashram. Since this was going to be a big volume of several hundred pages, I was initially reluctant to accept the work because I felt that I would not have enough time to complete it. However, once I overcame my diffidence and accepted the commission, help and cooperation began to pour in. Since some of it was wholly unexpected, I suspected that Sri Bhagavan's divine grace was again at work.

At first, my initial fears appeared to be justified. Ten days prior to the publication date I had still not managed to print more than a small part of the book. At that point I temporarily lost my courage and rushed off to the ashram.

I prostrated before Sri Bhagavan, told him about the lack of progress and informed him, 'Unless the help of some other press is taken, the volume will not come out on the first of September'.

I then sat before him, enjoying his darshan, waiting for his reply.

After a few moments of silence he said in a low melodious tone, 'Do your work'.

These three simple words had a magical effect on me. They fired me with fresh vim and vigour and there arose in my heart a strong belief that the volume would surely be out on the scheduled date. I had received my orders from my Master. I had simply to obey and 'do my work'. I had faith that all the other details would be looked after by him.

I returned to Bangalore and told the story of my experience at Sri Ramanasramam to my co-workers in the press. All of them accepted Sri Bhagavan's order in the same spirit as I had done. For the next few days all of us worked day and night with full faith, zeal and enthusiasm. The amount of work turned out in those last ten days was, in retrospect, quite astonishing. Then, when three days remained till our deadline, a party of about ten devotees came to my house on its way to the ashram. They were going there to attend the golden jubilee celebrations. Three of them turned out to be expert bookbinders. I immediately enlisted their aid and managed to complete the work of the souvenir a day early.

Between 1945 and 1947 the Aruna Press printed all the publications of Sri Ramanasramam. The work was complex and I often found myself having to argue with the official at Sri Ramanasramam who had been put in charge of the publications there. The tension between us increased to the point where both of us decided that we should go to Sri Bhagavan to get our differences resolved.

The rest interval between noon and 2.30 p.m. was chosen for our meeting because we wanted to be alone with him. We went to the hall at noon and waited outside for him to return from lunch. On his way back he saw both of us waiting for him. Sensing that we had some business to discuss, he took his seat on the big stone couch that stood outside the hall. My friend immediately started to present his side of the dispute. However, it soon occurred to him that Sri Bhagavan was not comfortable sitting outside on this stone bench. He stopped in the middle of his plea, folded his hands in a respectful way, and requested Sri Bhagavan to go inside the hall. He said that the business should be conducted with Sri Bhagavan seated comfortably on his sofa.

The Power of the Presence

Sri Bhagavan dismissed the appeal with a smile, saying, 'What is wrong with this seat? Was there a soft bed and a sofa when I was up there [pointing to the hill]? Up there the bare stones served as my bed as well as my seat.'

It was clear that in our unseemly haste and our anxiety to plead our respective cases we had been responsible for causing this discomfort to him. Feeling very guilty about this, I felt very embarrassed when my friend's request was turned down. In an anguished voice I begged Sri Bhagavan to follow the advice.

'No, Bhagavan, no. That won't do,' I said. 'It is our earnest prayer that you should not sit here in the hot sun. We will resume our talk only after you go into the hall and sit comfortably on the sofa.'

This time he accepted the advice. Neither of us knew why he finally agreed after rejecting the first appeal. He got up, went inside and, as requested, sat on his sofa. Both of us then placed our cases before him. He quietly listened to us and gave his verdict in the language of silence. Smiling with great charm he maintained complete silence both during and after the presentation of the arguments. The judgement was the best possible one for both of us. Sri Bhagavan's silence had healed the breach. As we emerged from the hall both of us had a spontaneous impulse to embrace the other. In those few minutes our hearts had changed. We separated with the resolve to bury the past and to treat each other in future with love and friendship. The silken tie with which Sri Bhagavan bound us on that day has never snapped again.

Visions

Sometimes in life there is a clash between two competing obligations, especially if both seem to be equally important. At such times it is rather difficult to arrive at the right decision. It has been my experience that at such times our gracious Master leads us to the proper decision. I will give an example from my own life.

At one time I felt that my political duty as a Gandhian demanding that I should court arrest,<sup>1</sup> but my domestic duties bade me otherwise. As I was eager to go to jail as part of the Independence struggle, it pained me that, out of regard for my family, I was not able to do so. I found myself in a dilemma and I could not of my own accord see the way out. The situation was so unbearable for me that I had to turn to the Master for help and relief. I therefore set out for Tiruvannamalai.

After reaching there I went and sat in the holy presence of the Master. While I was sitting there, I began to wonder how I should place my difficulty before him because I did not feel like broaching the subject verbally. I finally decided to pour forth my prayer from my heart in silence in the form of a plea for Sri Bhagavan to extend his benign help to me. I began to pray and while I concentrated on my mental plea, I watched his radiant face and his sparkling eyes that were full of love and kindness. And then, astonishingly, something like a miracle began to happen. Sri Bhagavan's face transformed itself into that of Mahatma Gandhi, while his body remained the same. As I stared at it with awe and wonder, the two faces, those of Sri Bhagavan and Gandhiji, began to appear to me alternately in quick succession. I felt my heart filling with joy and yet at the same time I was wondering whether what I saw was real or not. I turned my eyes away from Sri Bhagavan and looked around me to see if others were seeing what I saw. Seeing no sign of wonder on their faces, I concluded that what I saw was a picture from my own imagination. I closed my eyes and sat quietly for some time. Then, as I began again to look at Sri Bhagavan's face, the vision immediately reappeared, but this time with a slight change. In addition to the two faces of Sri Bhagavan and Gandhiji, those of Krishna, Buddha, Kabir, Ramdas and a host of other saints began to show themselves in quick succession. Now all my doubts vanished and I began to enjoy this grand and divine show. The vision lasted about five minutes. My mind dropped all its worries and I found myself able to hand over my problem to the <sup>1</sup> During British rule it was common for Indians seeking Independence to protest by committing acts of civil disobedience that were illegal, thus compelling the British rulers to arrest and imprison them. This course of action was known as 'courting arrest'.

---

The Power of the Presence

capable hands of the Master. Though he spoke no words to me, it came to pass that the problem was solved without infringing either of my two duties. In fact, both duties were fulfilled satisfactorily.

I had another vision of Sri Bhagavan in 1943. During my visit to Sri Ramanasramam that year, I visited the temple of Sri Arunachaleswara with my family and a friend who was a devotee from Madurai. This is the main temple in Tiruvannamalai, the same one that Sri Bhagavan stayed in when he first came to Arunachala.

While we were walking through the spacious courtyards I did not have any inkling of the wonderful experience I was to pass through when I finally saw the deity.

On reaching the innermost shrine we discovered that we were early, for the doors of the shrine had not been opened. We decided to wait there till someone came to unlock them. I leaned back against a pillar and began to think about Sri Bhagavan's early life. Suddenly my thoughts began to materialise physically as scenes from his early life began to appear before my eyes as vividly as if I were watching a cinema film.

The film had the following scenes, all of which I saw very clearly: Venkataraman is writing the imposition in his uncle's house in Madurai. Leaving it aside, he sits bolt upright, closes his eyes and becomes absorbed in the more congenial practice of meditation. His elder brother Nagaswami is watching him and rebukes him for neglecting his lessons. Venkataraman then decides to leave the house. He takes three rupees from his brother's college fees and departs after leaving a short note. He reaches the railway station. He buys a ticket to Tindivanam, gets into the train and sits quietly in one corner. A moulvi [Muslim scholar] who is discoursing to other passengers notices him and asks him where he is going. On learning that Venkataraman has got a ticket to Tindivanam but wants to go on to Tiruvannamalai, the moulvi directs him to break his journey at Villupuram. I see Venkataraman getting down at Villupuram and walking through the town in search of food. He waits near a hotel whose meals are not yet ready. Meanwhile he loses himself in samadhi. When the meal is ready, he takes it, offers to pay for it, but the hotel owner refuses payment. He then goes to the railway station and buys a ticket to Mambalapattu. From there he walks for about ten miles and reaches the temple of Araiyaninallur. In the temple he sees a vision of dazzling light and goes into samadhi again. He then goes to Kilur, where he pledges his earrings and gets four rupees for them. With this money he goes to the railway station and buys a ticket to Tiruvannamalai.

The entrance to the inner shrine of the Arunachaleswara Temple.

While I was enjoying this wonderful divine vision, the doors of the shrine opened and my vision was interrupted by the loud blowing of pipes and the beating of drums. The people who were waiting with us stood up to get the Lord's darshan. I too mechanically stood up with the others. After this short interruption, my vision continued. Though the idol of Sri Arunachaleswara was before my eyes, I could clearly see Venkataraman getting out of the train at the Tiruvannamalai station. He then ran towards the temple. As he was coming nearer and nearer, the noisy music rose to a higher and higher pitch. Venkataraman entered the temple, ran to the shrine and embraced the lingam with both his hands. My feelings were ecstatic. My whole body experienced a divine thrill and tears of joy rolled down my cheeks. This state of sublime joy lasted a long time and was both indescribable and unforgettable.<sup>2</sup>

I am not the only person to have had a vision of Sri Bhagavan in the inner shrine of the temple. When I printed The Golden Jubilee Souvenir for the ashram in 1946, I discovered that a devotee from Nepal, Sardar Rudra Raj Pande, had had an equally spectacular experience there. This is how he described it:

When I reached the centre of the temple, all my attention was directed to the one purpose of seeing the image or lingam in the sanctum sanctorum. But, strange to say, instead of the lingam I see the image of the Maharshi, Bhagavan Sri Ramana, his smiling countenance, his brilliant eyes looking at me. And what is more strange, it is not one Maharshi that I see, nor two, nor three – in hundreds I

---

<sup>2</sup> It is not widely known that Bhagavan did, on his arrival in the temple in 1896, embrace the Arunachaleswara lingam. All the major biographies of Bhagavan state that he merely stood in front of it. Bhagavan himself was initially reluctant to have this story made public. Since he was not a priest of the temple, the temple administration might have regarded the embrace as a provocative and ritually contaminating act that could only have been cancelled out by having an elaborate ceremony [kumbhabhishekam] to reconsecrate the lingam.

Many temples have these ceremonies, usually once every few decades, to purify the deity of any accidental past contamination and to empower it for the future. The Arunachaleswara Temple had one of these regular kumbhabhishekams after Bhagavan moved to Ramanasramam. Since this ceremony would have cancelled the ritual pollution engendered by Bhagavan's unauthorised embrace, Bhagavan himself commented that the story could now be included in any subsequent publications.

Kunju Swami's version of this story can be found in a 1980 article by Ra Ganapati in Ramakrishna Vijayam, a Tamil journal.

see the same smiling countenance, those lustrous eyes. I see them wherever I may look in that sanctum sanctorum. My eyes catch not the full figure of the Maharshi, but only the smiling face from the chin above. I am in raptures and beside myself with inexpressible joy ... .

That bliss and calmness of mind I then felt, how can words describe [it]? Tears of joy flowed down my cheeks. I went to the temple to have darshan of Lord Arunachala and I found the living Lord as he graciously revealed himself. I can never forget the deep, intimate experience I had in the ancient temple.<sup>3</sup>

The vision I had of Sri Bhagavan in the temple strengthened my faith in him. The other vision I had in the hall assured me that the help of all spiritual Masters, including Sri Bhagavan, was available to me all the time. Having been blessed with these visions, I now knew that I was on the right path, and I knew that my Master was guiding me in everything I did.

Darshan and Grace

Replying to a question of a visitor to Sri Ramanasramam a few years ago, Sri Ramana Maharshi said: 'To have darshan of a saint is sure to bring good to you. Thousands of people pass by Tiruvannamalai in trains every day, but few alight here and fewer still visit the ashram. About darshan of and association with a saint, the scriptures say that it is a vessel that enables you to cross the vast ocean of samsara. What more benefit do you want?'

I can heartily endorse this comment, citing the evidence of my own particular case. By merely having the darshan of Sri Bhagavan, the sun of spiritual wisdom appeared on the horizon of my life, driving away the darkness of disbelief and delusion. It illuminated my heart with the light of devotion. Since that blissful moment, the gracious gleam of light in my heart has been growing into a bigger and brighter flame.

How does darshan actually work? Vinoba Bhave, the great <sup>3</sup> The Golden Jubilee Souvenir, 1949 ed., p. 168.

---

The Power of the Presence

disciple of Mahatma Gandhi, explained the process in a speech he gave many years ago at Visakhapatnam in Andhra Pradesh:

I own the fact that a person's external activities stop automatically when his heart is fully saturated with love and his sense of non-duality with all beings reaches its consummation. If we happen to meet such a person who has attained oneness with all, his mere darshan will drive away our miseries. But from among crores [tens of millions] of people, we will find only one mahatma [great being] of this type.

Sri Bhagavan was undoubtedly one of those rare mahatmas who had the power to banish suffering merely through his presence, merely through giving darshan. This giving of darshan, and the concomitant transmission of grace, formed the central and most important part of his teaching.

Having said that, one must be wary of attaching too much importance to the external physical form of the one who gives darshan, for has not Sri Bhagavan himself said, 'The Guru is within. Meditation is meant to remove the ignorant idea that he is only outside. If he be a stranger whom you await, he is bound to disappear also. What is the use of a transient being like that?'

He further says that in order to receive the grace of the Guru 'One of two things must be done: either surrender yourself because you realise your inability and need a higher power to help you; or, investigate into the cause of misery by self-enquiry and so merge in the Self. Either way you will attain freedom from misery. God or Guru never forsakes the devotee who has surrendered himself.'

So, the Guru provides the darshan and the silent grace. The devotee, for his part, tries to enhance his ability to receive and experience that grace by enquiring 'Who am I?' or by surrendering to the source. Truly speaking, darshan and grace go together; one inevitably follows from the other. Darshan begets the experience of grace, and if it does not beget it, the darshan is not that of a true saint or sage.

A saint's darshan will always be fruitful; it can only bring good.

But as Sri Vinobaji says, in the vast multitude of lakhs and crores there will only be one true sage. Hence, when we find such a sage, we must avail ourselves of his darshan and grace to our fullest capacity.

Though the darshan and the grace are always beneficial, the devotee may not always be aware of the purifying effect they are having on him. This can be illustrated by an incident I witnessed in Sri Bhagavan's hall.

For most of the day Sri Bhagavan used to sit on his sofa, which was adjacent to a window. Squirrels would occasionally come in through the window and run around near him. Sri Bhagavan would often respond to them by lovingly feeding them cashews or other foodstuffs with his own hand.

One day Sri Bhagavan was feeding the squirrels when a Muslim devotee, who had been watching him, gave him a note in which was written: 'The squirrels are very fortunate because they are getting the food from your own hands. Your grace is so much on them. We feel jealous of the squirrels and feel that we also should have been born as squirrels. Then it would have been very good for us.'

Sri Bhagavan couldn't help laughing when he read this note.

He told the man, 'How do you know that the grace is not there on you also?'

And then, to illustrate his point, he started to tell a long story.

'One saint had the siddhi [supernatural power] of correct predictive speech. That is, whatever he said came true. In whatever town he went to, the local people would come to him to have his darshan and to get his blessings. The saint, who was also full of compassion, removed the unhappiness of the people by blessing them. Because his words always came true, the blessings always bore fruit. That is why he was so popular.

'During his wanderings he came to a town where, as usual, a lot of people flocked to him to get his blessings. Among the blessing seekers there was a thief. He went to have darshan of the saint in the evening and asked for his blessings. When the saint blessed him, the thief was very happy. He felt certain that, because of these blessings, when he went out to steal at night, he would be successful. But it turned out otherwise. Whenever he went to break into a house, somebody or other from that house would wake up and he would have to run away. He tried in three or four places but he could not succeed anywhere.

The Power of the Presence

'Because of his failure, the thief got very angry with the saint.

'Early the next morning he went back to him and angrily said, "You are an impostor! You are giving false blessings to the people."

'The saint very peacefully asked the reason for his anger. In reply the thief narrated in detail how unsuccessful he had been during his attempts to steal the previous night.

'Having heard his story, the saint commented, "In that case, the blessings have borne fruit".

"How?" the thief asked with astonishment.

"Brother, first tell me: being a thief, is it a good or a bad job?"

"It is bad," the thief admitted, but then he defended himself by saying, "But what about the stomach that I have to feed?"

'The saint continued with his explanation: "To be unsuccessful in bad work means that the blessings have indeed borne fruit. There are so many other ways of feeding the stomach. You should accept any one of them. To come to this conclusion it was necessary that you be unsuccessful in your thieving work."

'The thief understood and informed the saint that in future he would take up some other, honest work. He prostrated before the saint and left.'

Having narrated the above story, Sri Bhagavan asked the Muslim devotee, 'Do you mean to say that if everything goes according to your desires, only then is it possible to say that the grace of a saint has worked?'

'I don't understand,' replied the Muslim devotee.

Sri Bhagavan explained in more detail: 'The blessings of a saint perform the purificatory work of life. These blessings cannot increase impurity. One whose understanding is limited will ask for blessings so that he can fulfil certain desires, but if the desires are such that their fulfilment will make the seeker more impure rather than purer, the saint's blessings will not enable him to fulfil the desires. In this way the seeker is saved from further impurities. In that case, are not the saint's blessings a gift of compassion?'

The Muslim devotee finally understood and was satisfied by these words.

Frugality, Faith and Non-Possession

As Sri Bhagavan's fame began to spread, the number of visitors to the ashram increased. Many of them tried to offer him presents such as fancy sheets for his sofa, curtains for the doors and windows, embroidered carpets, etc. In order to satisfy the devotees who offered these things, Sri Bhagavan would usually allow his attendant to substitute, for a short period of time, the new offerings for the ones that were already in use. After a few hours they would be removed and sent away to the ashram storeroom, and the old, still-serviceable items would be brought back into use. Sri Bhagavan would briefly utilise these presents merely to strengthen the devotion of the donors. Left to himself, he would use cheap or old items, and never claim that they were his own. Devotees who tried to get him to use newer or better-made products could always count on resistance from Sri Bhagavan himself. I discovered this for myself when I tried to give him a new pen.

Sri Bhagavan generally used two fountain pens: one contained blue ink, the other, red. Both of these pens were quite old and looked, to me at least, worn out. One day the top cover of the red-ink pen cracked, so a devotee took it to town to have it repaired. It was gone for several days. During this period Sri Bhagavan reverted to an old-fashioned nib pen that had to be dipped in an inkpot of red ink. Since this seemed to cause him some inconvenience, I decided to get him a new pen. I wrote to a friend in Bombay and asked him to send one immediately. A few days later the pen arrived by post. I went straight to Sri Bhagavan and handed over the unopened parcel containing the pen.

Whenever a parcel or letter bore the name of the sender on the cover, Sri Bhagavan never failed to notice it. As soon as he received the packet from me, he turned it over and read the name of both the recipient and the sender. Having deduced that the parcel had been sent at my instigation, he took out the pen, carefully examined it, and put it back in the box. He then tried to hand the box to me.

The Power of the Presence

Allowing it to remain in his hand, I explained, 'It has been ordered from Bombay specially for Sri Bhagavan's use'.

'By whom?' he asked.

'By me,' I said, not without some embarrassment because I was beginning to feel that Sri Bhagavan did not approve of my action.

'What for?' demanded Sri Bhagavan.

'Sri Bhagavan's red-ink pen was out of order,' I said, 'and I saw that it was inconvenient for him to write with a pen holder and nib.'

'But what is wrong with this old pen?' he asked, taking out the old red-ink pen that had by then been received back in good repair.

'What is wrong with it?' he repeated. He opened it up and wrote a few words to demonstrate that it had been restored to full working order.

'Who asked you to send for a new pen?' demanded Sri Bhagavan again. He was clearly annoyed that I had done this on his behalf.

'No one asked me,' I said, with faltering courage. 'I sent for it on my own authority.'

Sri Bhagavan waved the old pen at me. 'As you can see, the old pen has been repaired and writes very well. Where is the need for a new pen?'

Since I could not argue with him, I resorted to pleading and said, 'I admit that it was my mistake, but now that it has come, why not use it anyway?'

My plea was turned down and the new pen went the way of all its forerunners. It was sent to the office to be used there.

Sri Bhagavan gave us an example of how to live simply by refusing to accumulate unnecessary things around him. He also refused to let anyone do any fund-raising on behalf of the ashram. In this too he set an example. He taught us that if we maintain an inner silence and have faith in God's providence, everything we need will come to us automatically. He demonstrated the practicality of this approach by refusing to let anyone collect money for the construction of the temple over his mother's samadhi. Though large amounts of money were being spent on it every day, we had to rely on unsolicited donations to carry on the work. I knew this from direct experience because one day the ashram manager asked me to get permission from Sri Bhagavan to go to Ahmedabad to ask for a donation from a rich man I knew who lived there. Sri Bhagavan, as usual, flatly refused. No amount of persuasion could move him from his categorical 'No'.

'How is it,' he complained, 'that you people have no faith?'

He pointed to the hill and told us, 'This Arunachala gives us everything we need'.

In his early years on the hill Sri Bhagavan and his devotees lived on begged food. He had no objection to this form of begging. Indeed, as a teenager he had walked the streets of Tiruvannamalai, begging for his own food. What he objected to, when devotees went out to beg for their food, was asking for specific items. Devotees could only eat what was freely given.

In the period that Sri Bhagavan lived in Virupaksha Cave, visiting devotees would often leave food for the people who lived there. The resident devotees would beg for additional food if the donated amount was not enough. If the combined amount was insufficient to make a good meal for everyone, Sri Bhagavan would mix all the food together, add hot water and make a kind of porridge that would then be shared equally among all those present.

Devotees who found this home-made gruel unappetising would sometimes request that at least some salt should be added to the mixture.

'But where are we to get the salt?' Sri Bhagavan would ask. 'Who will give us salt unless we specifically ask for it? If once we relax our rule of non-begging in order to get salt, the palate that craves for salt today will next cry out for sambar, then for rasam, then for buttermilk and so on. Its cravings will thus grow endlessly. Because of this we should stick to our rule of non-begging.'

It was certainly no joke to live with Sri Bhagavan in those early days. Sometimes the devotees had to do without salt, at other times without a substantial meal. There were even days when there was no food at all.

When Sri Bhagavan's mother came to stay with him, she insisted on starting a kitchen. Utensils were needed for it, but how to get them without asking or making the need known? Some things were acquired easily. When the word spread that a kitchen had been started, many of the necessary items of equipment arrived unasked from devotees who lived in town, but some useful utensils were not forthcoming.

The Power of the Presence

Sri Bhagavan's mother solved the problem merely by bringing it to his attention. It was well known that if Sri Bhagavan suddenly became aware that some needed item was not available in the ashram, it would often appear, unasked, soon afterwards. This happened far too often for it to be a coincidence.

One day, for example, a ladle was required. Instead of asking for it from some devotee, his mother told Sri Bhagavan about it.

He merely replied 'We'll see,' but he didn't ask anyone to bring one.

How could he, who had taken to non-begging, ask even for a ladle? But within a couple of days a devotee, of his own accord, brought half a dozen ladles and placed them at his mother's feet. When other vessels or utensils were needed, she would inform Sri Bhagavan and he would give his usual reply: 'We'll see'. Within a short space of time the required item would arrive. So, without breaking or relaxing Sri Bhagavan's strict 'no specific begging' rule, the kitchen at Skandashram expanded and thrived.

This did not only happen with kitchen items. During his stay at Virupaksha Cave Sri Bhagavan often developed a severe cough. During one of these attacks he took bala harade [a small myrobalan or cherry plum] as a remedy, chewing it and swallowing its juice. This treatment lasted for a considerable amount of time, as a result of which the entire ashram stock of bala harade was consumed. When there were none left, the cough returned with more violence and vigour. Palaniswami, Sri Bhagavan's attendant, asked for permission to buy more bala harade from the town. Of course, the permission was not granted.

A few minutes later Sri Bhagavan casually remarked, 'Harade [big myrobalan] is a better remedy than bala harade for coughing'.

Shortly afterwards a devotee entered the cave with a small bundle in his hand. He had come to pay homage to Sri Bhagavan.

Holding the bundle before him he said, 'As I was coming

The kitchen building at Skandashram

here from my village, I saw a man sitting on the roadside, selling big myrobalans. It struck me that it was good for coughing, so I brought some for Sri Bhagavan's use.'

He opened the bundle and placed it before Sri Bhagavan, who asked him with a smile on his face, 'But why did you buy so much?'

The devotee replied, 'It was quite cheap and the seller wouldn't agree to sell me a small amount. I had to buy all of them. Let them be here. Since I don't want any myself, let them stay here.'

The idea of buying and bringing harade to the ashram thus coincided with the utterance of Sri Bhagavan's words. Can this coincidence be attributed to anything else than the strict observance of the rule of non-begging by Sri Bhagavan?

At times, also to cure his cough, Sri Bhagavan used to chew black raisins. These also ran out while Sri Bhagavan was still having coughing attacks.

Palaniswami again requested Sri Bhagavan to allow him to buy more from the town, but his request was summarily turned down with the remark, 'Let's see. Where's the hurry?'

A few minutes later Sri Gambiram Seshayya entered with a packet in his hand. 'What have you brought?' someone asked.

The Power of the Presence

‘Raisins,’ was the reply.

‘Then you must have known about our talk here,’ said Sri Bhagavan with a laugh.

‘Bhagavan!’ said Sri Seshayya, folding his hands in a namaskar, ‘How could I know in advance what was being talked about here? It just occurred to me when I started out from my house that I should bring something to offer here. When I went to the market, only one shop was open. In that shop only a small quantity of black raisins was available. There was nothing else there that could be useful here. So, I had to buy these black raisins. The thought of buying them never occurred to me before I entered the shop.’<sup>4</sup>

If there is a moral in these stories it is that all things flow towards the person who adheres strictly to the resolve of non-begging. Or, one could say that if one abides as the Self with the conviction that there is a higher power that arranges for all the necessary things to be supplied, then one need not go looking for them because they will arrive unasked.

Equality

Once, more recently, when Sri Bhagavan was very debilitated, his doctors recommended that he should take some nourishing food. But he would not listen to them or to the devotees who appealed to him to follow the advice. Some of them were earnestly begging him to eat thickly buttered bread, others were trying to make him drink milk and orange juice. But to all of them he had only one answer to give.

With his usual genial smile he would say, ‘But how can we afford to have such a luxurious diet? For us there can only be the poor man’s rations.’

‘But what is the harm in changing one’s diet for the sake of one’s health?’ ventured one devotee in a plaintive tone. ‘Even Mahatma Gandhi takes a special diet and Sri Aurobindo too does the same, to keep up their health. Please, therefore, take a tumblerful of orange juice, at least for our sake.’

---

<sup>4</sup> Bhagavan himself recounted many of the incidents in this section in Letters From Sri Ramanasramam, letter 54, dated 6th August, 1946.

'But do you know the cost of a tumbler of orange juice?' asked Sri Bhagavan.

'Oh, only four annas,' rejoined the devotee, with hope gleaming in his eyes.

'No, it won't be four annas. We will require about 200 tumblers of juice. Do you want me alone to gulp down the drink with all of you watching, empty-handed? Moreover, how can poor people like us provide for 200 tumblers of juice, paying Rs 50 every day?'

This answer checked the devotee's pleas for a while, but he would not give up so easily. He still had a lingering hope that if once Sri Bhagavan started to take the nourishing diet, he would continue to do so for at least enough days for his health to improve a little. So, the next day, he quietly prepared hot rotis [chapatis], well smeared with ghee [clarified butter], and filled two tumblers, one with milk and the other with orange juice.

Then with the assistance of a few other devotees, he took all these things to Sri Bhagavan on a tray.

'What's all this?' he enquired as he saw them walking towards him.

The devotees placed the tray before him, uncovered it and begged him to accept the offering. He refused point-blank even to touch the food, asking instead that the devotees should consume it. Repeated appeals to him from other devotees were also of no avail.

Then, in the heat of the moment, a woman devotee who was present at the time burst out, 'O Bhagavan! Just as you are kind enough to agree to sit on your sofa [instead of on the floor like everyone else] for our sake, why not also favour us by taking this special diet?'

Though the woman spoke these words in good faith, the outcome was quite the reverse of what was expected. Hardly had she finished when, to her and the other devotees' dismay, Sri Bhagavan got down from his sofa and squatted on the floor. The woman was horrified by the consequences of her suggestion.

She called out with anguish in her heart and tears in her eyes, 'Bhagavan! No! Please don't! What a stupid woman I am! What stupid words I blurted out!'

The Power of the Presence

Then she got hysterical and started screaming.

All the others stood around, aghast at what had happened. The remedy had turned out to be worse than the disease. The rotis, the milk, the juice were abandoned as everybody racked their brains to find a way out of this impasse and reseated Sri Bhagavan on the sofa.

It was certain that no appeal or argument would move Sri Bhagavan to change his decision. Eventually a devotee who had been associated with Sri Bhagavan for over thirty-five years resolved to take a desperate step. Without any fuss, he simply started lifting Sri Bhagavan bodily. Seeing this, one or two other devotees joined him and together they succeeded in placing Sri Bhagavan's body back on the sofa. Sri Bhagavan did not resist, nor subsequently did he try to come down from the sofa. But the devotees had been so upset by the incident that even after seeing Sri Bhagavan sitting quietly on the sofa again, they began to beseech him not to get down again.<sup>5</sup>

Sri Bhagavan accepted the new situation graciously. Though the status quo had apparently been restored by sheer physical force, it was really the love and devotion of the devotees that caused him to stay on the sofa, much to everyone's relief. Thus, a loving attempt by devotees to make Sri Bhagavan agree to take a special diet came to a fruitless end.

Though he would usually get annoyed if devotees tried to give him special treatment, or if he saw people needlessly inflicting suffering on others, Sri Bhagavan could never be provoked to anger by any amount of criticism or personal abuse. Two separate incidents illustrate this very well.

Once when Sri Bhagavan was sitting in his cave on Arunachala, a sadhu who was jealous of his increasing fame urinated on his back as a deliberate act of provocation. Sri Bhagavan remained as unperturbed and Self-absorbed as ever. Not a tinge of anger rose in him. The sadhu was baffled by his calm response. Realising that nothing could irritate Sri Bhagavan, the poor sadhu quietly went away.

---

<sup>5</sup> Bhagavan's sofa appeared in the 1920s. A devotee named Rangaswami Gounder brought it and insisted that Bhagavan use it. Prior to that he had sat on a slightly raised platform in one corner of the hall. Rangaswami Gounder begged and pleaded for three days before he finally got Bhagavan to agree to use the sofa. For this remarkable achievement he was thereafter known as 'Sofa Gounder' to all the devotees.

On another occasion, many years later, a young man visited Sri Ramanasramam with an evil purpose. After entering the hall and taking his seat on the front row, he began to put all kinds of aggressive questions to Sri Bhagavan. We found out later that he wanted to extort hush money from the ashram by exposing Sri Bhagavan as a hypocrite and a fraud. He had already successfully tried his trick elsewhere, and by repeated practice he had cultivated this art into a paying profession. Having gained successes in other ashrams, he had come to Sri Ramanasramam to try his tricks there.

Sri Bhagavan's own method of meeting insolence, malice, jealousy and misbehaviour in general was the observance of complete silence. This powerful weapon baffled and disarmed all aggressive and insolent visitors.

When the youth tried to draw Sri Bhagavan into a controversial discussion so that he could catch him out when he made a potentially embarrassing answer, Sri Bhagavan remained completely silent. The poor man could make no headway at all. He tried insults, he tried belching out foul language, but Sri Bhagavan did not utter a single word. He did not accept any of the insults or respond to them in any way. He merely remained calm, unperturbed and smiling. The young man, after exhausting all his insults, saw the impossibility of achieving his object. He had to admit defeat and quit the ashram.

Vibhuti

Some years ago a sadhu came to Tiruvannamalai. He used to give a pinch of vibhuti [sacred ashes] to all those who went to have his darshan. A rumour soon began to circulate that the vibhuti given out by this sadhu had miraculous powers. Large crowds flocked to the home of this ascetic, and many people began to call him 'Vibhuti Swami' – 'the saint of the holy ashes'.

Vibhuti Swami had set up his camp about a quarter of a mile from Sri Ramanasramam, occupying a mantapam on the Bangalore road. Because this mantapam was on the same road as Sri Ramanasramam, but farther away from town, the pilgrims who went from town to see Vibhuti Swami had to walk past Sri Ramanasramam. Many of these people would visit Sri Ramanasramam on their way back from Vibhuti Swami's mantapam to pay their respects to Sri Bhagavan. Consequently, the number of visitors to the ashram increased dramatically. Sri Bhagavan noticed the increased traffic through the hall, enquired about it and was duly informed of the cause of these unusual crowds.

The Power of the Presence

Sri Bhagavan used to go for a walk twice a day, once at 9.45 a.m. after he had read the morning post, and once at 4.45 p.m. after he had gone through all the replies to the same letters. In his later years Sri Bhagavan's knee joints got very stiff, making it hard for him to go for his twice-daily walks. If he didn't massage them regularly with oil, the joints refused to work to such an extent that he could not even get down from his sofa. One day he forgot to massage one of his knees and only discovered it when he tried, unsuccessfully, to get off his sofa.

Seeing that my eyes were fixed on the stiff knee joints, he remarked, 'This body requires oiling, just like a machine. This joint did not work because it was not oiled.'

After speaking these words he began to massage the joint with oil to get it working again. Just then a group of visitors on their way back from Vibhuti Swami entered the hall to pay their respects to Sri Bhagavan.

On seeing them Sri Bhagavan said humorously to one of us, 'What must they be thinking about this swami [meaning himself]? Perhaps they say to themselves, "How can this swami heal others when he cannot even heal himself?"'

Sri Bhagavan was so humble he could make a joke about his own inability to effect physical cures either on himself or on other people. Even when miraculous cures did happen on account of a devotee's faith in him, he never accepted responsibility for the miracle. For him, all these things went on automatically and were part of the natural activity of the Self.

Bhagavan sitting on a rock outside Pachaimman Temple in 1911.

Faith in Sri Bhagavan has produced many a miraculous cure. Since we are on the subject of vibhuti and miracles, I can illustrate this very well by retelling a story that was told to me by an old devotee who had known Sri Bhagavan from his earliest days on the hill.

In 1908 Sri Bhagavan was staying in Pachaiaimman Temple on the north-eastern side of the mountain. There were many tamarind trees nearby. The municipality gave the highest bidder the contract to collect tamarind from these trees every year.<sup>6</sup> That particular year a Muslim had got the contract. Since these trees gave an unusually rich yield, the contractor himself used to protect <sup>6</sup> In India it is widely believed that it is inauspicious to have a tamarind tree on one's property. However, there is a huge demand for the fruit of this tree because it is a major ingredient in Indian cooking. In colonial times the government resolved this problem in an elegant way. Tamarind trees were planted on government land by the sides of major roads, providing shade to travellers and fruit for the market. Each year the government would accept tenders for harvesting specified sections of the highways, and the highest bidder would get the contract. The money raised in this way would be used to maintain the roads.

---

The Pachaiaamman Temple in the 1940s

them from the monkeys, driving them away by shooting stones at them from a catapult. Because he only wanted to scare them away, he took care to see that they were not injured. However, by some ill chance, a stone from his catapult hit a monkey on its head so hard, it died on the spot. Immediately, a large number of monkeys surrounded the corpse and began to wail and lament the death of their relative. Then, by way of a complaint, they took the dead body to Sri Bhagavan in the Pachaiaamman Temple.

These monkeys considered Sri Bhagavan as a friend and arbiter. He frequently settled their internal disputes and even acted as an honest broker when rival tribes were having territorial disputes. He could communicate with them quite easily and he did his best to establish peace and harmony among the warring tribes and their fractious members. So, at this time of anger and grief, it was quite natural for the monkeys to bring both the corpse and their complaints to Sri Bhagavan.

As soon as they came near him, they burst into angry cries and tears. Sri Bhagavan, whose heart registered and mirrored the emotions of those around him, responded to their anguish with tears of his own. Gradually, though, his emanations of sympathetic love soothed and calmed the turmoil within the monkeys' hearts.

Then, by way of consolation, Sri Bhagavan told them, 'Death is inevitable for everyone who is born. He at whose hands this monkey died will also meet with death one day. There is no need to grieve.'

Sri Bhagavan's words and his loving kindness pacified the monkeys. They went away, carrying the corpse with them.

Two or three days later the Muslim contractor became bedridden with some serious malady. The story of the 'upadesa' given by Sri Bhagavan to the aggrieved monkeys spread from mouth to mouth till it reached the home of the Muslim contractor. The members of his family became convinced that his sudden illness was due to the saint's curse. They therefore went to Pachaiaimman Temple and began to plead for Sri Bhagavan's pardon for the ailing contractor.

'It is certain that your curse has affected him,' they began. 'Please save him from death. Give us some vibhuti. If we apply it to his body, he will surely recover.'

With a benign smile Sri Bhagavan replied, 'You are mistaken. I never curse or bless anyone. I sent away the monkeys that came here by telling them the simple truth that death inevitably occurs to all those who are born. Moreover, I never give vibhuti to anyone. So please go home and nurse the patient whom you have left all alone.'

The Muslims did not believe his explanation. They announced that they were not going away unless they received some vibhuti to cure their relative with. So, just to get rid of them, Sri Bhagavan gave them a pinch of wood ash from the outside of his cooking fire. On receiving it, their faces beamed with joy. They expressed their hearty gratitude to the sage and returned home.

The family of the contractor had great faith in this 'vibhuti'. Soon after it was applied to the ailing man, he began to recover. Within a few days he rose from his bed, fully recovered.

What a world of difference there was between the vibhuti given by Vibhuti Swami and that given by Sri Ramana Swami! And what sublime humility went with Sri Bhagavan's offering of vibhuti!

Jagadisha Sastri

Jagadisha Sastri was a distinguished Sanskrit scholar whose association with Sri Bhagavan went back to the days when the latter lived in Virupaksha Cave. He told me the following two stories, neither of which has been recorded before, when I met him years later in Bombay.

In the early years of this century Jagadisha Sastri went to see Sri Bhagavan in Virupaksha Cave to listen to him giving a spiritual talk. Everyone was so engrossed in listening, no one was aware of the passage of time. As the talk did not end till well after midnight, Jagadisha Sastri decided to sleep in front of the cave instead of returning to town. This was a brave act because in those days there were still wild animals on the hill.

Around 2 a.m. Sri Bhagavan began to feel concerned about his safety. He went out of the cave and put a pinch of snuff up the nose of Jagadisha Sastri, who was snoring in deep sleep. He woke up in an extremely startled state and began to sneeze repeatedly. Sri Bhagavan began to laugh because he found the repeated sneezes very amusing. Jagadisha said that he laughed so hard, the mountain was reverberating with the noise.

When he had managed to stop laughing, he told Jagadisha Sastri, very affectionately, 'You were sleeping so soundly. Don't you know that this is not a house but a hill? It is the home of wild animals and here their kingdom prevails. Suppose some tiger were to come here? What would happen to you? Go and sleep inside the cave.'

Jagadisha told me that he was so sleepy that he stumbled inside the cave and immediately fell asleep again. On hearing this story it did not surprise me that Sri Bhagavan had shown such concern towards one of his devotees. However, though I knew that he laughed and joked a lot and enjoyed playing games with devotees' children, I was astonished that his humour had erupted in such a mischievous and child-like way in the middle of the night.

Many years later, when Jagadisha Sastri and I were walking down a street together in Bombay, it occurred to me that I had never seen him wear any kind of footwear. The black tar roads of the city get very hot in summer and I found it hard to believe that anyone could walk comfortably on them without wearing sandals or shoes.

Jagadisha Sastri and his wife standing with Bhagavan on the hill in the 1940s.

I turned to him and asked, ‘Sastriji, your feet must have got burned a lot walking on these roads? Isn’t that so?’

‘No, no,’ he answered, ‘I have already got ravi raksha [protection from the sun] from Bhagavan. I may walk in any amount of heat but nothing ever happens to me.’

I naturally asked, ‘How did you get this ravi raksha?’

By way of an answer Sastriji told me a long story.

‘One day, right in the middle of the afternoon, Bhagavan took his kamandalu [water pot], got up and told me, “Jagadish, come with me to walk about on the mountain”.

“But it’s so hot,” I protested. “How can we move about in such weather?" I argued like this because I wanted to escape from the trip.

'Bhagavan found my excuse unsatisfactory. "You can move about in just the same way that I move about," he said.

"But my feet will burn!" I exclaimed. I didn't have any footwear with me and I didn't relish the idea of walking about over the burning rocks.

"Will my feet not burn as well?" replied Bhagavan, obviously feeling that this was not a serious obstacle. Bhagavan never wore any kind of footwear. He could walk on the toughest terrain in any weather without feeling the least discomfort.

"But yours is a different case," I answered, alluding to the fact that Bhagavan never needed footwear.

"Why? Am I not a man with two feet, just like you?" asked Bhagavan. "Why are you unnecessarily scared? Come on! Get up!"

'Having realised that it was useless to argue any more, I got up and started walking with Bhagavan. The exposed stones had become so hot because of the severe heat of the sun, walking on them made my feet burn.

'For some time I bore the suffering, but when it became unbearable I cried out, "Bhagavan, my feet are burning so much! I cannot walk one more step! Even standing here is difficult! On all sides it is raining fire!"

'Bhagavan was not impressed. "Why are you so scared?" he asked.

"If I remain in this terrible heat for any more time," I replied, "my head will crack open because of the heat and I will definitely die!" I was not joking. I really was afraid of dying.

'Bhagavan smiled and said in a very quiet and deep voice: "Jagadish, give up your fear and listen. You must have the bhavana [mental conviction and attitude] that you are the sun. Start doing japa of the mantra suryosmi [I am the sun] with the conviction that it is really true. You will soon see the effect of it. You yourself will become surya swarupa, that is, you will have the characteristics of the sun. Can the sun feel the heat of the sun?"

'I followed this instruction of Bhagavan and started doing japa of this sun mantra because there was no other way to be saved from the burning heat. In a short time I started to feel the effect of the japa. The severity of the heat began to lessen and eventually I began to experience, instead of severe heat, a pleasing coolness. As the feeling of burning diminished, I found that I was able to walk quickly alongside Bhagavan. By the time we had both reached Skandashram I found that my feet were not at all burnt as I had continued the mantra japa right up till the end of the walk.

‘Later, I was astonished to discover that the effect of chanting this mantra was permanent. Though I no longer chant it, I have never again suffered from the heat of the sun. I can now walk in summer on the tar roads of a city like Bombay with bare feet.’

The One with No Name

One day an old lady came into the hall at Sri Ramanasramam. After prostrating to Sri Bhagavan, she placed a slip of paper in his hands. I guessed that it contained a prayer or doubt of some kind because it was the custom of many devotees to offer their prayers or place their doubts before Sri Bhagavan in this manner. However, in this particular case, it turned out to be quite a different matter.

This old woman lived in town in a dilapidated temple and she needed money to repair it. With this purpose in mind she had got someone to prepare a draft of an appeal for funds. In order to collect the required amount more easily, she had hit upon the idea of having the appeal signed by eminent persons of the town. She had come to the ashram because she wanted Sri Bhagavan’s signature at the head of the appeal. This was the piece of paper that she had presented to him. Sri Bhagavan read it and then returned it to her without uttering a single word.

‘My work will be done if you will only put your signature on this appeal,’ the old lady said, urging him to sign.

Sri Bhagavan replied by saying, ‘It is well known that I never sign anything’.

She would not accept his refusal. Repeatedly she pressed him to sign, but she could not make him change his decision.

Finally Sri Bhagavan told her, ‘Yes, yes, you want me to sign your appeal, but how can one who has no name sign? What name will one sign?’

The old woman was puzzled. What did Sri Bhagavan mean

The Power of the Presence

by saying that he had no name? Was not his name 'Sri Ramana Maharshi'? Since everyone knew him by that name, why could he not write these three words on her paper?

Because she could not understand the significance of Sri Bhagavan's reply, she persisted in pleading with him to sign. Sri Bhagavan remained unmoved and kept silent. After some time the old woman gave up her attempts and left the hall without, of course, having obtained Sri Bhagavan's signature.

Autograph hunters would often come to the ashram and request Sri Bhagavan to sign something in their autograph books. Sri Bhagavan would give all of them the same answer:

'Let him who has a name sign. Here [meaning himself] there is no name. How then can there be a signature?'

Let us try to understand the significance of Sri Bhagavan's assertion on this point. It is known that he attained the divine state of namelessness in Madurai itself, at the age of sixteen, for the note that he left for his family did not bear any signature whatsoever. It read:

I have in search of my father, according to his command, started from this place. On a virtuous enterprise has this embarked. Therefore, for this act, none need grieve; nor to trace this out need money be spent. Your college fees are not yet paid. Rs 2 are herewith enclosed.

Thus _____

Instead of a signature there was merely a horizontal line.<sup>7</sup> There was no one left who could be given a name.

---

<sup>7</sup> Commenting on Bhagavan's refusal to sign his farewell note, B. V. Narasimhaswami wrote (Self-Realization, 1985, p. 31):

A signature would have been appended by [the] Venkataraman of earlier years. But on this occasion, the personality that began [the letter] with an 'I' had melted into 'this' in the succeeding lines, and at the close there was evidently no person remaining at that time and at that place to sign the letter. The sense of personality had sunk, vanished, or at any rate got too much attenuated to warrant a signature or produce an inclination to sign a letter.

The original Tamil note that Bhagavan wrote before he left home in 1896.

At the time when this farewell note was written he was known as Venkataraman, but when he settled at the lotus feet of Sri Arunachala this name dropped off because he never told anyone what his original family name was. For some time, therefore, he bore no name at all. Gradually, as people came into contact with him, he became known by different names at different times:

---

In November 1936 (Talks with Sri Ramana Maharshi, talk no. 281) Bhagavan was asked, 'Why do you not sign your name?' He replied: 'The author of Self-Realization has furnished his answer for this question. Moreover, by what name am I to be known? I myself do not know.'

Oddly enough, he had no objection to writing his name when he was correcting proofs or filling in omissions from printed texts that he saw. These, however, could not be counted as signatures. The signing of a signature indicates that one associates oneself with a particular name. This Bhagavan never did.

*Bhagavan with devotees in front of Virupaksha Cave, 1913.
Ganapati Muni is sitting to Bhagavan's right, and Gambhiram Seshayya, mentioned earlier in the chapter, is sitting second from the left.*

Bala Sannyasin, Bala Yogi, Kumara Swami, Kumara Tapasvi, Gurumurtam Swami, Brahmana Swami. In this manner, during the period from 1896 to 1907, many names were given to him. But so far as he was concerned, he did not accept any single one of them.

In 1907 the famous yogi Ganapati Muni came to offer his obeisance at Sri Bhagavan's feet. After Ganapati Muni had been impressed by Sri Bhagavan and his upadesa, he made enquiries and found out that his original name had been Venkataraman. Ganapati Muni decided to rename him 'Bhagavan Sri Ramana Maharshi', the 'Ramana' component being a diminutive form of Venkataraman. This name was eventually accepted by all the other devotees. But even this was not accepted by Sri Bhagavan. For him, the Self was nameless and formless. He did not care if people assigned any number of names to him. He himself would not accept any single one of them.

Silence

Sri Bhagavan's language was that of silence. The 'speech' delivered through this medium was full of miraculous potency, as the following anecdote reveals.

When he was staying in Virupaksha Cave, a District Collector and a Deputy Collector came there for his darshan. After prostrating to Sri Bhagavan, the Collector began to speak, narrating at length all the sadhanas he had done and all the spiritual literature he had read. At the end of his speech he confessed that in spite of all these activities peace was as far from him as it had ever been.

As soon as he had finished, the Deputy Collector began to tell his own story. It was equally long. These two speeches took quite a long time to deliver, but Sri Bhagavan did not interrupt them even once.

He continued to remain in silence even after the speeches had ended. The Collector gave up waiting for a reply and delivered yet another long speech. Sri Bhagavan listened in silence and continued to remain in silence when the speech was over.

The Collector, not unnaturally, was a little put out by Sri Bhagavan's unresponsiveness.

He said, in an aggrieved tone of voice, 'We have been speaking to you for a long time, but you don't open your mouth at all. Please tell us something. Anything, however brief, will do.'

Sri Bhagavan finally spoke to them, saying, 'All this time I have been speaking in my own language. What can I do if you won't listen to it?'

The Collector was an intelligent man, well versed in spiritual matters. He caught the meaning of Sri Bhagavan's cryptic reply. Suddenly overpowered by devotion, he fell down at the feet of Sri Bhagavan and chanted a Sanskrit verse from Sankaracharya's Sri Dakshinamurti Stotra:

Look at the wonder under the banyan tree! While the disciples are old and grey-haired, the teacher is a blooming youth. And though the Master's speech is simple silence, the doubts of the disciples are all resolved!<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> Siva manifested as Dakshinamurti in order to instruct and enlighten four ascetics. In the traditional version of his story he appeared in the form of a young boy sitting under a banyan tree. The four ascetics attained

The Power of the Presence

Both of the visitors then abandoned their speeches and questions, preferring instead to sit before Sri Bhagavan in silent meditation. They got the peace they had come looking for and departed fully satisfied.

The greatness of silence as a medium of instruction can be shown by a dialogue on this subject that took place between Sri Bhagavan and a devotee. Though it took place on a different occasion, it can serve as a commentary on the encounter between Sri Bhagavan and the two officials.

Question: What is the fruit obtained by mauna [silence]?

Bhagavan: Antara mauna [inner silence] is self-surrender only; that means living without the ego sense.

Question: What is the meaning of mauna?

Bhagavan: The state that is beyond speech and thought is called mauna. This is dhyana [meditation] without mental activity. Dhyana means controlling the mind; deep dhyana means permanent speech.

Silence is eternal speech; that is, the perpetual flow of language. By speaking, this flow is broken because the words create an obstacle to that silent language.

People may listen to discourses for hours, and may feel happy doing so, but still not improve. But silence, the eternal speech, enhances the welfare of all humanity. Mauna only means 'proficiency in speech'. Oral discourses do not have the proficiency of silence. Silence is the eternal, enlightenment as a result of receiving Dakshinamurti's silent transmission. No words were ever exchanged between the Guru and these disciples. Dakshinamurti means 'southward-facing god' and his image appears on the outside of the southern wall of all South Indian Siva temples. Many devotees felt that Bhagavan was a modern manifestation of Dakshinamurti: he took up residence on the southern side of Arunachala, he identified himself with Arunachala-Siva, and he always preferred to teach and transmit his grace through silence.

---

unobstructed flow of speech. That is the supreme language.<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>9</sup> This is a paraphrase of statements that Bhagavan made on several occasions. See for example the following quotes, all taken from Be As You Are, 1992 ed., pp. 102-4:

Silence is ever-speaking. It is a perennial flow of language which is interrupted by speaking. These words I am speaking obstruct that mute language. For example, there is electricity flowing in a wire. With resistance to its passage, it glows as a lamp or revolves as a fan. In the wire it remains as electric energy. Similarly also, silence is the eternal flow of language, obstructed by words.

What one fails to know by conversation extending to several years can be known instantly in silence, or in front of silence – Dakshinamurti and his four disciples are a good example of this. This is the highest and most effective language.

A realised one sends out waves of spiritual influence which draw many people towards him. Yet he may sit in a cave and maintain complete silence. We may listen to lectures upon truth and come away with hardly any grasp of the subject, but to come into contact with a realised one, though he speaks nothing, will give much more grasp of the subject. He never needs to go out among the public. If necessary he can use others as instruments....

The Guru is the bestower of silence who reveals the light of Self-knowledge which shines as the residual reality. Spoken words are of no use whatsoever if the eyes of the Guru meet the eyes of the disciple.

Lakshmana Swamy

In the first chapter of The Power of the Presence, part one, Bhagavan tells Rangan that he has too many doubts and that he is asking too many questions.

Bhagavan then remarked, 'Some people come here, sit before me and silently grasp the sole thing to be known. Then, without saying anything, they go away.'

Lakshmana Swamy belongs in this rare category. When he realised the Self in Bhagavan's presence, he had been with Bhagavan, on two separate visits, for less than four days. He had asked no questions and had not even spoken to Bhagavan. After his experience he went back to his ashram room, without speaking to anyone about what had happened.

Many people have reported dramatic experiences when Bhagavan looked at them, spoke to them, or merely smiled at them. When Lakshmana Swamy's climactic experience occurred, he was not even in the same room as Bhagavan. He was sitting outside the door of the new hall, looking in through the open doorway.

When I asked Lakshmana Swamy how he had managed to earn Bhagavan's grace so quickly and so fully, he smiled and replied, 'I finished all my work in previous lives. I was ready.'

Bhagavan sometimes spoke of a three-fold division of spiritual seekers. Some are like gunpowder, which will ignite with a single spark. Some are like charcoal, which needs a little heating before it will catch fire. The remainder are like wet wood, which needs a long period of drying out before it is ready to be ignited. When Lakshmana Swamy arrived at Ramanasramam in the latter half of 1949, he was fully ready for the divine spark.

I was brought up in my paternal grandfather's house in Gudur, Andhra Pradesh. My father, Bangaraiah, died when I was less than two years old and I have no memories of him at all. He had been a minor landowner in the area but the income from his land was not sufficient to support us. After he died my mother had to take an unskilled job in a local mica factory to supplement our income.

I attended the local primary school and later on the District Board High School, but in neither place did I have any interest in the subjects that were being taught. I never did much studying and I only managed to pass the annual exams because I had a useful ability to memorise texts after reading them through once or twice. My marks usually put me about half way down the class, but even this modest accomplishment seemed to surprise my classmates because none of them ever saw me do any work. The only part of the syllabus that I had any interest in or aptitude for was drawing. I found that I could sketch realistic portraits without training or practice, and art was the only subject in which I ever topped the class. Outside the classroom I was an enthusiastic participant in various team games such as hockey and football, but when the games were over I never did much socialising with the other boys because I preferred to sit quietly by myself. Though I wasn't as gregarious as the other boys, I seemed to be reasonably popular because I had a keen sense of humour and an innate ability to make other people laugh.

I had no interest in traditional religious practices when I was young. My mother would sometimes take me to the local temples, but even at a very young age I knew intuitively that performing rituals in front of stone statues was pointless.

When I was very young I remember asking my mother, 'How can this stone be God? God sometimes talks to devotees. How can a stone speak?'

Mother replied, 'God only talks to the priests when a curtain is drawn in front of the image'.

The Power of the Presence

My next question was, 'How does a stone manage to eat all the food offerings that are given to it?'

I received a variation on the same answer: 'The priests feed the offerings to the god when the curtain is drawn.'

Even though I was very young, I could not believe that such things were possible, so I grew up with little or no interest in religious practices.

In my seventeenth year, while I was still at school, an inexplicable incident occurred that changed my life. I was sleeping in my family's house when an unknown malevolent force appeared to descend on me. I awoke with a tremendous pressure bearing down on my chest and my immediate reaction was that some unknown evil force was trying to kill me. Immediately and spontaneously the Rama mantra, 'Rama, Rama', erupted from within me with a great roaring sound. I did not decide to say it, it just naturally burst out of me with great force. The evil presence, which could not compete with its power, vanished immediately. I had never repeated this mantra before, nor had it ever occurred to me that this mantra had any power. Prior to this remarkable incident I had been utterly sceptical about all matters pertaining to religion, but my lack of belief could not withstand this direct, first-hand experience. Concluding that there must be some power in the mantra, I began to repeat it on a regular basis. At the same time I also started doing pranayama, yogic breathing exercises.

I had to accept that the spontaneous eruption of this Rama mantra had somehow saved me, but my mind could not understand how it had happened. I felt I needed some kind of explanation as to why this mantra had been so successful in countering the evil force. I thought of all the people I knew, hoping that my mind would come up with someone who could give me a satisfactory explanation, but there was no one in my circle of friends or relatives whose judgement I really trusted. In the end I decided to keep quiet about it. Though it was a remarkable event that saved me from death, I discussed it with no one.

Soon after this strange incident my lifestyle began to change. I started getting up at 3 a.m. every morning in order to go for a long walk along the railway tracks. My destination was a bridge that spanned the local river. While it was still dark I would jump or even dive into this river and have an early morning swim. I had never swum before and my lack of experience almost resulted in my death. One morning I got sucked into a whirlpool, but had enough presence of mind not to fight it. Instead, I allowed myself to be sucked into it. It spun me down to the bottom of the river, then pushed me out sideways, and I surfaced in a stretch of calm water. On a subsequent day I got my foot caught in a hole in the railway track and only managed to extricate it a few minutes before a train passed by. This was and still is a very busy line<sup>1</sup> and on one of my morning walks I found the mangled corpse of someone who had been less lucky than I in avoiding an oncoming train. I left the body where it was because I didn't want to be blamed for the accident.

The earliest available photo of Lakshmana Swamy, probably taken when he was nineteen.

I was not taking these dangerous early morning walks simply because I felt a need for exercise. When I emerged from my morning swim, I would sit in meditation, practising pranayama and doing japa of the name of Rama. Occasionally, for variation, I would do pranayama while I was still submerged in the water. This daily programme lasted about two hours. At around 5 a.m. I would walk back to my house. I was once bitten by a poisonous snake as I was walking down the track and had to hack away the poisoned flesh with a sharp stone, but nothing ever deterred me from going there every day. This compulsion to rise at 3 a.m. to swim and meditate lasted for several years.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gudur Junction is the station where the trains from Delhi and Calcutta meet on their way to Madras. Though Gudur is a small town, it has a vast amount of railway traffic.

<sup>2</sup> I once asked Lakshmana Swamy why he had taken so much trouble and put up with so much danger and inconvenience in order to swim and

The Power of the Presence

The meditation and the pranayama brought about a certain amount of mental peace but they didn't bring any answers to some of the philosophical problems that were beginning to engage my mind. I was beginning to ask myself questions about the nature of the world and my relationship to it, and I became acutely aware that I was not in a position to resolve these problems by myself. This inability to find satisfactory solutions generated a sense of frustration in me. With no one to guide me, and having no ability to work things out for myself, I decided that my problems could only be solved if I had a vision of God. When that vision failed to appear, my frustration increased.

I did not want to give in to the sense of futility that was creeping up on me so, to counter it, I began to increase the amount of meditation I was doing. In addition to my early morning activities, if I had any free time during the day, I would sit under a tree in a local park and do japa of the name of Rama. I had not told any of my friends about my early morning meditations or my increasing interest in God. I wanted to keep it to myself. When they asked me why I was spending so much time sitting under that particular tree, I told them that it was a health-giving tree and that when sunlight passed through the leaves it became enriched with vitamins.

While my friends may not have noticed much difference in my behaviour, apart from this peculiar habit of sitting under this tree, my family certainly did. They greeted my new lifestyle with mixed feelings.<sup>3</sup> Though a certain amount of devotion is acceptable in meditate in the dark. He laughed and said that it was a habit left over from his previous life. He discovered later in his life that he had been a yogi in his previous incarnation, and this yogi had had similar habits.

---

<sup>3</sup> Many years later Lakshmana Swamy's brother wrote these comments about this period of his life:

Dispassion began to assert itself and take a firm root in him. His yearning for God strengthened his dispassion [for] the ephemeral objects and pleasures of the world... . He often blamed his prarabdha [destiny] which had thrown him into the quagmire of this world which is full of persons swayed by desires and sensuous enjoyments. He was at a loss to know why people run after the most Hindu households, the alarm bells go off when boys start to show too much interest in the religious life. Very few parents want their son to grow up to be a sadhu. When it looked to my relatives as if I might be heading that way, they tried to arrange an early marriage for me. A girl who came from the family that my elder brother had married into was selected for me. Both families were keen to go ahead with the marriage, but I refused to listen to any of their arguments. I insisted, point blank, that I had no intention of marrying anyone. In the end they had to accept my decision.

I passed my final school exams a few months later, much to the amazement of my friends, and I decided to continue my studies at the V. R. College in Nellore, which is about twenty-four miles north of my home town. My chosen subjects were botany, physics and chemistry, but in the years I was there I paid little attention to the subjects I was supposed to be studying. I preferred instead to read spiritual books such as the Bhagavad Gita and works on advaita Vedanta. I still retained the habit of getting up at 3 a.m. and going for a swim. The River Pennar ran through Nellore, and I found it to be an ideal place for swimming, even though it had a dangerous current. One boy, who looked to be about nineteen, drowned while I was there. I tried to save him, but I couldn't reach him in time. Though I was by then a good swimmer and never in any danger myself, the drowning of this boy, just before I reached him, made a deep impression on me. The incident made me acutely aware that death is inevitable for all human beings, and that it may occur at any moment. I understood that nothing in this world is permanent, including life itself. I resolved that I would live without any attachments and I further resolved that I would transcend the human condition completely by realising the Self.

In the summer vacation of my first year at college I returned to Gudur and had my first major spiritual experience there. The illusory pleasures of this transitory world. (Taken from Yogeeswara Sri Lakshmana, a Biography, pp. 4-5.)

---

This mellow view came from hindsight. At the time, the brother was just as disturbed by Lakshmana Swamy's behaviour as the rest of his family.

The Power of the Presence

big artificial lake that borders the town had dried up completely. I found the dry lakebed to be a good place to go to perform my pranayama exercises. Usually, I went to a small hillock that in winter was a small island in the lake.

I was sitting there one evening in the padmasana [full lotus] position just as darkness was beginning to fall. As I began my usual pranayama exercises, the mind suddenly became concentrated, focussed and utterly still. There was a flash of light within me. It persisted and I became aware of an inner divine light, shining in all its magnificence. The light encircled and engulfed me and within a few seconds I lost all consciousness of the body. There was total inner stillness. Paramatman, the Supreme Self, shone within me in its fullest glory and splendour. The effulgence of Atman within me impressed on me the fact that Atman is God Himself in this temple of the physical body. My joy knew no bounds because I realised that Atman had become my Guru.

The experience was a brief one but it gave me a glimpse and a foretaste of the goal I was aiming at. I tried on many occasions to repeat this experience but it never returned. I reluctantly came to the conclusion that I would never be able to establish myself in a state of permanent Self-awareness through my own efforts. I realised that a Guru in human form was necessary, and that the formless Atman could not, by itself, bring about my realisation.

Though I reached this conclusion I had no idea where I could find such a competent Guru. The desire to meet one was there, but I could do nothing about it. Lacking any clear alternative, I went back to college to begin my second year and soon fell back into the usual routine of swimming, meditation and half-hearted studying. The only difference was that I dropped the practice of pranayama. I had begun these daily exercises four years earlier. No one had taught me how to do them. I had picked up the techniques myself by reading Raja Yoga, a book by Swami Vivekananda. I had started to do these exercises in order to control my mind and keep it free from unwanted thoughts. At the end of these four years I decided that my mind was sufficiently quiet for me to dispense completely with this aid. For the next three years my sadhana consisted exclusively of japa of the name of Rama.

On the last day of my second year at college my attention was drawn to a large crowd that had congregated in and around the main lecture hall. I was not able to enter the hall itself because it was crowded with students, but looking over the heads of the people at the back of the hall I could see that the lecture was being given by my English professor, G. V. Subbaramayya. I was at a great distance from the platform so I could not hear clearly the words of the lecturer, but when he pointed to a portrait that was standing next to him on the platform and said that the sage in the portrait was Sri Ramana Maharshi, the words rang in my ears. Up till that moment I had never heard of the Maharshi. However, as soon as I heard the name, I felt an irrepressible longing to see him. Since no details of his location were given, I was not then aware of how I could go about finding him and seeing him. I should have asked Professor Subbaramayya, but I missed my chance, and since this was the last day of the academic year, I returned home to Gudur with no useful information about the Maharshi and his whereabouts.

G. V. Subbaramayya

I didn't have to wait long to discover the information that I desired. As I was returning to Gudur by train the following day I saw a small booklet entitled Sri Ramana Maharshi on sale at the bookstore on the station platform. I eagerly purchased it, opened it at the first page and read the following verse that had been composed in Sanskrit by Ramana Maharshi himself:

In the interior of the Heart-cave the one Supreme Being, Brahman, shines as 'I-I', verily the Atman. Entering into the Heart with a one-pointed mind either through self-enquiry or by diving within or by breath control, abide thou in Atmanishtha [the state of being firmly established in the Self].

The Power of the Presence

I had already learned enough Sanskrit to understand the meaning. This one verse made a deep and immediate impression on me. There was no question of memorising it. As soon as I read it, all the lines were immediately imprinted on my heart.

I learned from this small booklet that Ramana Maharshi lived in an ashram just outside Tiruvannamalai. I located this town on a map, but at this time in my life I wasn't in a position to make a pilgrimage there.

My laziness at college finally caught up with me and I twice failed my second year exams. I went back to staying with my family in Gudur, but life there was far from congenial. I was under renewed pressure to get married and spent a lot of time arguing with my family over this issue. I stood firm and again refused to consider marriage. To avoid the quarrels at home I spent most of my time in solitary places where no one could find me or speak to me. Most of my time was spent in meditation. There was no necessity of finding a job because I had a small private income that had come from inheriting a share in my grandfather's house. My portion of the house was rented out and I gave the income to my family.

A year went by in which I did little except meditate. Towards the end of 1948 my mother insisted that I must make a larger contribution to the family's budget. A job was found for me in a local mica company where I worked as a clerk-typist for about five months. I had no interest whatsoever in the work. I did it only because my family insisted that they needed more money. At the beginning of 1949 I resigned my position and persuaded my mother to accompany me on a trip to Sri Ramanasramam. One of my aunts had already been to see Bhagavan and she reported to me that he was an old man who wouldn't live much longer. She described him as 'a ripe fruit about to drop off the tree'. This report spurred me into action, making me realise that I didn't have much time if I wanted to see Bhagavan.

My pilgrimage to Ramanasramam began at the local train station in Gudur. While I was waiting for the train to arrive, my mother started talking to two women who were also waiting for the same train. It was soon discovered that they too were heading for Ramanasramam. They were accompanying Sathyananda Swami, a long-time devotee of Ramana Maharshi. When this swami was informed that we were on our way to Tiruvannamalai and that we were planning to visit Ramanasramam for the first time, he invited us to join his party. I was delighted by this fortuitous turn of events. I felt that Bhagavan himself had sent one of his devotees to guide us to his ashram.

The journey took all day and it was well after dark when we finally arrived in Tiruvannamalai. We spent the night at a choultry and the following morning we walked to Ramanasramam in the company of Swami Sathyananda. Instead of approaching the ashram by the main road, we ended up arriving through the back gate, located between the kitchen and the storeroom. As we were climbing the steps that led up to the gate, we saw Bhagavan walking slowly in the direction of the cow shed. Bhagavan noticed us, stopped for a few seconds to look at us, and then carried on with his walk. Entering through the back gate had thus proved to be very fortuitous because it enabled us to have a brief and almost private darshan of Bhagavan at a time when the ashram was immensely crowded.

I soon discovered that we had arrived at an inconvenient time. The ashram was overflowing with visitors who had come from all parts of the country to attend the consecration and opening ceremony of the temple that had been constructed over the samadhi of Bhagavan's mother. The main consecration ceremony [kumbhabhishekam] was due to take place a few days after our arrival.

Because we had arrived with a devotee who was well known to the ashram management, there was no problem in getting accommodation, but speaking to Bhagavan proved to be more difficult. I wanted to speak to him about the experience of the Self I had had in the dried-up lake in Gudur, but I never got a chance because there were always large crowds of people milling around him. I had to be content with having darshan in a large crowd of other devotees.

On one of the days of my visit I was standing by the main ashram well. Bhagavan was sitting nearby on a bench outside the hall where he usually slept, listening to a group of brahmin boys chant extracts from the Vedas. As I looked at the scene in front of me, the world completely lost its solid, substantial reality. I became aware that everything I was perceiving in that scene was nothing more than a dream-like projection. This experience gave me the certainty that everything in the world, including the body of Bhagavan that I was concentrating on, was unreal. As I gazed at the scene I had the knowledge and the experience that the real Ramana Maharshi was not the dream body I saw before me; it was the formless, effulgent Self that I had experienced on the dried-up lakebed in Gudur. This experience soon passed away though, leaving me in my former state.

Bhagavan sitting in the crowded new hall. The photo was taken during the kumbhabhishekam celebrations.

I divided my time between sitting with Bhagavan at the times he was available and sitting in solitary meditation on the hill. I only stayed three days on this first visit, but that short period of time was enough to convince me that in Bhagavan I had found the Guru I had been seeking. I decided to change my japa from 'Hare Rama' to 'Hare Ramana' since I felt that I could avail myself of my Guru's grace by chanting his name. I read the Telugu version of Who Am I? which was on sale at the ashram bookstore while I was there, but I didn't feel inclined to take up the practice of self-enquiry at the time because I was more accustomed to doing japa.

After three days I left my mother at Ramanasramam and went back to Gudur. I wanted to devote myself full time to meditation but the atmosphere in my house was too oppressive for proper concentration. I decided instead to go to a village called Govindapalli, which was nearer the coast and about fifteen miles from Gudur. Some of my relatives lived in this village but I didn't want to stay with them. I just wanted a quiet place where I could meditate without being disturbed. I selected a quiet spot, away from the village and about three miles from the sea. My relatives helped me to build a small hut, which I paid for out of my own funds.

I moved into this hut and spent most of my time in meditation. Milk was sent once a day from the village, but I prepared the rest of my food myself, cooking it on a small fire that I would build by the side of my hut. I still kept up with the habit of getting up at 3 a.m. and going for a swim. Sometimes I swam in a tank near my hut and sometimes in a small river that flowed nearby. In the evenings I often walked to the beach and swam in the sea.

The local people had been very cooperative in the matter of building the hut, but many of them had advised me not to live on the spot I chose because there was supposed to be an evil spirit that inhabited the area. I wasn't worried about things like that, so I settled down to do my sadhana. After staying there for a few days, I heard a great noise that sounded as if all the trees in the vicinity were being blown down by a great wind. I went out of the hut and looked around me. I saw that the trunks of all the local trees were bending down to the ground and then springing back up again. Since there was no obvious natural explanation, I decided that it was this local spirit that was trying to frighten me. These spirits are harmless so long as you do not fear them, but if you become afraid, some of them are so strong, they can easily kill you. I ignored it and went back to my meditation.

My meditation proceeded very well. The constant repetition of my Guru's name made my mind very quiet. On a few occasions it became absolutely still. When this happened the question

The Power of the Presence

‘Who am I?’ would spontaneously arise inside me. Whenever this happened, as if in answer to the question, my mind would automatically sink into its source, the Heart, and experience the bliss of the Self. I never made any conscious attempt to practise self-enquiry. The question ‘Who am I?’ simply appeared inside me whenever my mind became completely free from thoughts.

My stay in Govindapalli lasted about five months. At the end of that period I contracted a severe case of malaria and had to be taken back to Gudur. The doctor who examined me there decided that I was likely to die. He informed my relatives, many of whom then came to see me to pay their last respects. I had no intention of dying. I had a strong determination that I would not die until I had seen my Guru again. I placed a picture of Ramana Maharshi by my bedside and willed myself to stay alive long enough to see him again. I meditated on this picture throughout the ordeal. Whenever I looked at it, I felt as if Bhagavan himself was laughing or smiling at me. I am convinced that it was the power and the grace of Bhagavan that kept me alive and enabled me to make a full recovery.

I was in bed for nearly two months. Towards the end of that period I became a little despondent about my apparent lack of spiritual progress.<sup>4</sup>

As soon as I was able to walk I told my family that I wanted to return to Tiruvannamalai to have Bhagavan’s darshan. Both my mother and my brother tried to convince me that I was too weak to travel, but I refused to listen to their advice. There were some heated arguments about the matter but when it became clear that my family would not give me permission to go, I walked out on them, vowing never to return to their house again. As I left I drew three long vertical lines on the doorframe of my family home. This is a traditional symbol that indicated to my family that I had no intention of ever entering their house again. When my brother finally realised that I could not be persuaded to stay, he very reluctantly gave me Rs 60 to take care of my immediate expenses.

---

<sup>4</sup> ‘The body could escape from the jaws of death, but I could not escape from the ever-yawning mouth of the tiger, ego. I could not suppress the surge of egoism. How to efface it? I was much perturbed and gazed at the portrait of Bhagavan. From Bhagavan’s face flowed grace and compassion in abundance.’ (Taken from Yogeeswara Sri Lakshmana, a Biography, p. 10.)

The doorway to the new hall through which Lakshmana Swamy was viewing Bhagavan on Vijayadasami day 1949. Bhagavan was sitting on the sofa where the stone statue of him is now positioned.

I set off for Ramanasramam immediately and arrived during the Navaratri celebrations of 1949.<sup>5</sup> The second day of my visit was Vijayadasami, the final day of the festival. In the afternoon I stood in front of the Mathrubhuteswara Temple, waiting for Bhagavan to appear. He came out of his small room, accompanied by Swami Satyananda, entered the new hall that was in front of the temple and took his seat on the stone sofa. There were only a few devotees present at the time. I went up to Bhagavan and made a full prostration in front of him. When I stood up, Bhagavan looked intently at me for a few moments. I withdrew and went to look for a place where I could do self-enquiry and not be disturbed by the other devotees. I selected a pillar that was outside the door that Bhagavan had entered through and sat down in front of it. Though I was outside the hall, Bhagavan could still see me from where he was sitting. Shortly afterwards I saw Muruganar taking a seat close to Bhagavan. I noticed that other <sup>5</sup> This is a ten-day celebration that occurs in September or October.

The Power of the Presence

devotees were entering the hall. After a few minutes Muruganar came and sat down next to me. A few other devotees came and sat near us. I closed my eyes and began to do "Who am I?", the quest for the Self.

Within a few minutes I found that all thoughts had disappeared except for the primal 'I'-thought. The question 'Who am I?' then spontaneously appeared within me. As it did so, the gracious smiling face of Ramana Maharshi appeared within me on the right side of the chest. There was something like a lightning flash that resulted in a flood of divine light shining both within and without. Bhagavan's face was still smiling on the right side of my chest. It seemed to be lit up with a radiance that exceeded innumerable lightning flashes rolled into one. The bliss and joy these experiences gave me brought tears to my eyes. A torrential flow welled up within me and rolled down my face. I was unable to control them in any way. Finally, the 'I'-thought went back to its source, the internal picture of Ramana Maharshi disappeared, and the Self absorbed my whole being. From that moment on the Self shone alone and the 'I'-thought, the individual self, never arose or functioned in me again. It was permanently destroyed through the grace of my Guru in his holy presence.<sup>6</sup>

I remained absorbed in the Self, without body consciousness, for about three hours. The experience was so intense, even when I opened my eyes I found I was incapable of either speaking or moving. The realisation had caused an immense churning within the nervous system, so much so that when body consciousness returned, I felt extremely weak.

When I was finally able to register what was going on around me, I noticed that everything was perfectly normal. Bhagavan was still sitting on his couch and all the assembled devotees were pursuing their normal duties and activities. My tears and my loss of consciousness had not attracted any attention at all.

I remained where I was for another three hours because I was

---

<sup>6</sup> When I asked Lakshmana Swamy if he wanted to elaborate on this brief description in any way, his reply was even more terse: "The 'I' went back to its source, the Self, and disappeared without trace. The Self remained alone. It is eternal peace and bliss."

incapable of movement of any kind. I remember hearing the dinner bell and the noise of the Vijayadasami procession as it went round the temple,<sup>7</sup> but I was too absorbed in the Self to contemplate either eating or joining in the celebrations. At 9 p.m. I finally rose to my feet and very slowly made my way back to my allotted place in the men's dormitory.

The following morning I still felt very weak. Thinking that I might feel better if I ate some food, I started to walk towards town to see if I could get a meal at one of the hotels there. Unfortunately, I overestimated my strength. Before I could find a place to eat, I had an attack of dizziness and collapsed on the street. A friendly passer-by took me under his wing, ascertained that I needed food, and then guided me to a hotel that was located on the south side of the temple. I felt much stronger after the meal and I had no difficulty returning to the ashram.

Later that afternoon I went up to Bhagavan in the darshan hall, prostrated before him, and handed him a note via his attendant Venkataratnam. The note, which I had written in Telugu said, 'Bhagavan, in your presence and by the quest ["Who am I?"] I have realised the Self'.

Bhagavan read the note, looked at me for a moment, and then his face lit up in a radiant smile. For some time we just looked at each other.

Bhagavan broke the silence by asking me where I had come from.

'Gudur,' I replied.

'That's in Nellore District, isn't it?' enquired Bhagavan.

'Yes,' I answered.

This was the only conversation I ever had with Bhagavan. After giving him these two brief replies, I didn't speak again for another thirteen years.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> The place where Lakshmana Swamy was sitting was very close to the route that was used to take the Goddess around the temple precincts. The procession must have passed within inches of where he was sitting.

<sup>8</sup> When I once asked him why he had remained silent for so long, he replied, 'The experience of the Self is beyond words and speech. It is impossible to explain it or talk about it. Since there was nothing I could

The Power of the Presence

As I returned to my place in the hall I heard Bhagavan tell Venkataratnam to keep my note on a shelf that was behind his sofa.

Accommodation was in short supply at the ashram. After four days I was asked to leave to make room for other visitors who wanted to see Bhagavan. I decided to look for accommodation in the surrounding area since I planned to stay permanently. I had no intention of going back to Gudur. Before I left home my family had agreed to send me the rental income that came from my half of my grandfather's house. The amount was more than enough to live on. Raja Iyer, the local postmaster, helped me to find a small thatched house about 250 yards from the ashram. I shared it with a boy called Raghavan who was already living there. Since I had money and he didn't, he agreed to do all the cooking if I bought the food.

Venkataratnam is standing behind Bhagavan, next to Major Chadwick.

One of the first people to visit me in my new house was Venkataratnam, Bhagavan's attendant.

On his first visit he said, 'In all the years I have been Bhagavan's attendant, I have never seen anyone present a note like this before. I am experienced enough in the ways of Bhagavan to know that the beaming smile he immediately gave you was proof that the claim was genuine. Bhagavan made no comment to me about your note and the message it contained, but he did ask me to check up on you to make sure that all your needs are being taken care of and that you are properly looked after.'

---

say about it, I kept quiet.'

Lakshmana Swamy finally resumed speaking in 1963 and his first words were a brief talk on Upadesa Saram.

From that day on Venkataratnam became a regular visitor. He would come and sit with me whenever his services were not required in the ashram, and on one occasion he embarrassed me by trying to massage my feet and legs.

Bhagavan was giving darshan every day from nine to eleven in the morning and from three till six in the afternoon. At those times I would go and sit with him in the ashram. Around midday I would walk to town and eat a meal in a hotel, and at the end of the afternoon darshan I would sit for an hour on the lower slopes of Arunachala. I had no further interaction with Bhagavan, but every time I went to see him in the hall, his face would light up and break out into the same radiant smile he had given me on the afternoon I had presented him with my note.

After about three months in Tiruvannamalai, I moved to Palakottu. I found a small room I could occupy by myself and moved in. I paid one rupee a month rent to the watchman of the Ganesh Temple that bordered Palakottu Tirtham and I engaged a young girl to bring a cooked lunch to me since I no longer felt like making the daily trip to town to eat.<sup>9</sup>

A woman called Marakatha Mataji also tried to feed me, but her attentions were a bit of a nuisance. She had a great liking for sadhus and she spent most of the money she earned on feeding them. When rich visitors came to the ashram, she would offer her services as a cook. She was very good at her job and her employers, including at least one maharani, were always satisfied with her cooking. She often used to make sweets for her employers, and when she did so, she would always contrive to keep a few for the sadhus near the ashram. Any cash payment she received would also be converted into sweets for sadhus. At distribution time she always tried to give the recipients a big kiss along with the sweets. I became a favourite of hers and she frequently tried to ambush me with a sweet and a kiss as I was leaving my room. If I knew she was there, I would stay in my room in the hope that she would give up waiting and go away, but she had enormous patience and sometimes I had to put up with her ministrations. She also tried to kiss Bhagavan <sup>9</sup> Walking to town and back would be a round trip of over two miles.

---

The Power of the Presence

*A late 1940s view of Arunachala, taken across the Palakottu tank.
The photographer would have been standing close to the front of Lakshmana Swamy's hut.*

on many occasions, but her habits were well known and his attendants had strict instructions to keep her away from him.<sup>10</sup>

Bhagavan's health was deteriorating very quickly and the darshan hours were often drastically curtailed. He had a sarcoma in his arm and the toxic by-products were spreading to the rest of his body. Several operations had failed to check the damage. After one such operation, he gave darshan lying on a couch outside the ashram dispensary. His eyes were nearly closed as I approached him, but as I stood before him, Bhagavan opened his eyes and gave me his usual radiant smile. I was so engulfed by this smile, I forgot to give the customary namaste greeting [palms together in front of the chest], and the ashram manager had to remind me to do it. After I left, Bhagavan relapsed into his former state.

---

<sup>10</sup> An account of her attempts to hug Bhagavan can be found in The Power of the Presence, part one, 'Chalam and Souris' chapter.

Though I never sought to attract Bhagavan's attention, he always seemed to know if I was in his vicinity, even if he couldn't see me. On an earlier occasion, when Bhagavan was giving darshan in the new hall, his view of me was completely obscured by a newspaper that one of his attendants was holding. He immediately asked the attendant to remove the newspaper and then beamed his usual smile at me.

Lakshmana Swamy, 1951

As the darshan hours became less and less, I began to spend more and more time sitting quietly in my room. I did pradakshina of Arunachala once a week, and I still sat on the mountain every evening, but my life was beginning to enter a new phase. I would spend hours and hours each day sitting in my room in a thought-free state in which I had no awareness of either my body or the world. This tendency to withdraw into the Self became stronger and stronger as the weeks and months went by.

By April 1950 it was clear to everyone that Bhagavan was about to give up his body. The cancer had debilitated him to such an extent, he could barely move. About a week before his death I was walking around the Mother's Temple, the one which was being consecrated on my first visit to the ashram. On my way round I stopped to look at a statue of Ganesh that had been recently garlanded. As I gazed at the statue, it began to move in its niche. The head and shoulders started to rock backwards and forwards, and each time it rocked forwards, the bowed head of Ganesh moved nearer and nearer to mine. I suddenly realised that if I stayed there any longer, the garland would slip from the statue's neck onto my own. I didn't want to be garlanded in this way, so I moved away from the statue and continued my walk around the temple.<sup>11</sup>

The Power of the Presence

A week later, on the evening of April 14th, I was cleaning my room in Palakottu when a picture of Bhagavan, which was normally kept on a stool in the corner of the room, fell to the ground. I put it back in its usual place, making sure that it was not in a position that would cause it to overbalance again. A few minutes later it fell to the ground for a second time. I felt intuitively this was a sign that Bhagavan was dead or dying. I felt a strong urge to go to the ashram, but before I could leave I lost awareness of the world and I became wholly absorbed in the

Bhagavan in the nirvana room, taken sometime during April 14th 1950, the last day of his life.

Self for a period of about two or three hours. Consciousness of the world returned shortly before 9 p.m. when I heard a great noise coming from the ashram. I knew then for certain that Bhagavan was dead. I rushed to the back gate of the ashram, the nearest gate to his room, only to find that the police had already locked it.<sup>12</sup>

By the time I made my way into the ashram by the front gate, Bhagavan's body had already been removed from the room where he had died. It had been put on display outside it. Later that night, when most of the grieving devotees had left, it was taken inside the new hall.

---

<sup>11</sup> When I asked Lakshmana Swamy why he didn't want to be garlanded, he replied, 'I didn't want to walk out of the temple with this garland round my neck. The ashram authorities would just assume that I had stolen it. My explanation would not have been believable, so I walked away before the garlanding could happen.'

<sup>12</sup> The police were there because the ashram authorities were afraid that the massive crowds might get out of control when Bhagavan died. To reduce the numbers an announcement had been made earlier in the evening to the effect that Bhagavan was in no danger and that everyone should go home. Most people remained.

I had seen Bhagavan for the last time earlier that day. On that occasion, as we looked into each other's eyes, I experienced such a strong wave of ecstatic bliss, I became completely oblivious of my surroundings. Now, seeing Bhagavan's lifeless body, I experienced very little emotion. People were crying all around me and my first reaction was that I too should shed a few tears for my Guru. But no tears came. I was unhappy that Bhagavan had died, but at the same time I was unable to cry or participate in the sorrow of the other devotees because I knew that nothing had really happened. I knew that Bhagavan was the Self before he gave up the body and I knew that he was the same Self afterwards. Filled with this awareness that nothing had really happened, I left the thousands of grieving devotees and silently returned to my room.

Most of Bhagavan's devotees left the area within a few days of the funeral, but since I had no urge to go anywhere, I remained in my room in Palakottu. In the weeks and months that followed, my health began to deteriorate. I spent most of my time in my room in a state of deep samadhi in which it was impossible for me to pay any attention to the body's needs. When the girl who cooked for me brought me my midday meal, I often ignored it. Sometimes I ate it, but mostly I gave it back to the girl to eat herself. After several weeks of living like this, my body began to waste away. I started to get attacks of dizziness when I stood up, and my digestive system started to malfunction. One attack of food poisoning left me so weak, I discovered I didn't even have the strength to pull a bucket of water out of the Palakottu tank. When I put the bucket in the water and pulled, the weight of the water pulled me into the tank. In my weakened state I was lucky to survive at all. One sadhu I knew succumbed to cholera and died, and there was an epidemic of malaria in the area that was also claiming many lives.

I ignored all these events and continued to sit quietly in my room. While I was inside I only ever wore a kaupina, but none of the thousands of mosquitoes that shared the room with me ever bothered to bite me. The only other occupant of the room was a squirrel that used to sit on my lap when I was in samadhi. I used to keep some peanuts near me, and whenever I emerged from samadhi, the squirrel would eat a few out of my hand.

The Power of the Presence

News of my weakened condition reached my relatives in Gudur. Despite our previous quarrels they were still concerned about me. They asked me to return to Gudur where I could be properly looked after, but I refused to leave. Sometime later my mother and brother came to visit for a few days. When they discovered the extent to which I was neglecting my body, they renewed their attempts to get me to come back to Gudur. My brother offered to build a hut for me where I could live alone and also undertook to provide me with food. I again refused, saying that I didn't want to leave Arunachala.

I spent a total of nine months in Palakottu, mostly just sitting quietly in my room. Towards the end of this period my skin turned yellow and it stayed that way for the next three years. Around October 1950 I finally admitted to myself that I was no longer capable of looking after my body. I had no one to take care of me, and I was never aware of my body for long enough to do the job myself. Reluctantly, I decided that I would accept my brother's offer, go back to Gudur and let my family look after me.<sup>13</sup>

---

<sup>13</sup> Lakshmana Swamy spent most of the next three years in samadhi, living in a small hut that his family built for him. Because of his ascetic lifestyle – he was sitting in padmasana for twenty hours a day and rarely eating – he attracted a large following. He tried to avoid everyone by remaining locked inside his hut, but when he announced that he would meet with people who wanted to see him twice a year, he was mobbed by tens of thousands of people. When he finally began to live a more normal life in the late 1950s, eating normally and going for walks, the visitors mostly stopped coming. Most of them thought that he had fallen from his previous high state. From the mid-fifties on, he lived a secluded life in a house near Gudur that had been provided for him by a devotee from Nellore. He began to meet with people on a regular basis in the 1960s, but he always preferred to live a private, solitary life. Around 1990 he moved back to Tiruvannamalai. For a few years he sat with devotees at public darshans that took place a few times each year, but these were discontinued in 2008. Nowadays (2019) he is a complete recluse.

Swami Ramanagiri

Swami Ramanagiri was a Swedish devotee of Bhagavan who has been largely ignored in the literature about devotees and their experiences with Sri Ramana. Though a few articles about him have appeared in The Mountain Path, the journal of Sri Ramanasramam, books that chronicle the experiences of devotees have all omitted to mention him. He failed to make the editorial cut in the collection of 160 devotees who appeared in Face to Face with Sri Ramana Maharshi; his story did not appear in the eight volumes of Arunachala's Ramana; I did not select him as a subject for the first editions of The Power of the Presence; V. Ganesan didn't mention him in Moments Remembered, his collection of devotees' stories; and he didn't even make an appearance in A. R. Natarajan's book on western devotees. Cumulatively, these omissions seem to be perverse and inexplicable since Swami Ramanagiri's story is astounding and unique: it is a great personal odyssey combined with a vivid demonstration of Bhagavan's power and grace.

I was prompted to write this account by a devotee who sent me this report of his visit to Swami Ramanagiri's samadhi:

There is a samadhi of one European devotee of Bhagavan near Vadippatti village, which is about 25 km from Madurai. His name is Ramanagiri. There is a Siva Lingam installed over his samadhi and a small temple built around it. I used to visit this place on my way to Madurai, which is located in a quiet spot,

Swami Ramanagiri's samadhi in his ashram near Madurai at the foot of a small mountain range. The manager of the place gave the following information about Sri Ramanagiri:

His original name was Peer Westin. He belonged to the royal family in his native Sweden. He came to India to study Sanskrit at Banaras Hindu University. He met Bhagavan and did not return to his native place. Bhagavan gave him a small begging bowl made by himself out of coconut shell. In the following days he could not get sufficient quantity of food as bhiksha, and complained to Bhagavan about it. Bhagavan told him that thereafter he need not go in search of food as it would come to him. From that time he did not have to bother about his food. He then moved to different places and settled at this place, which is near a jungle stream. The coconut shell begging bowl, made by Bhagavan, is kept safely in a jewel box, along with other belongings of Sri Ramanagiri. They gave it to me to see it. It has been made by cutting the coconut vertically. Though small in size, it is in perfect oval shape and nicely polished. Holding it in my hands, I was overwhelmed by emotion. As a souvenir I was given an old visiting card of Sri Ramanagiri with his original name. The card has his old name and address as 'Djursholm' [Sweden].

My curiosity was piqued by this report and I resolved to assemble an account of Swami Ramanagiri's life that would do him justice and bring him to the attention of devotees who know little or nothing about him. Since there is very little written material by Swami Ramanagiri himself, I have abandoned the usual formatting convention of having the subject's own contribution in roman and my own additional comments in italics.

Swami Ramanagiri was born into an aristocratic Swedish family in June 1921. Though he was related to the king of Sweden, it was the 'royal' yoga of Patanjali that finally claimed him. In his youth he came across Swami Vivekananda's Raja Yoga and found he had an immediate affinity with the subject matter, so much so that he started to develop yogic siddhis soon after beginning the practices. He came to India in 1945 on a two-year scholarship to study philosophy at Banaras Hindu University, but the principal aim of his journey was to find a competent teacher who could help him to make progress with his yogic practices. The Danish devotee Sunyata recalls meeting him soon after his arrival:

Peer Westin as a baby with his father in Sweden

It was on a sunny, winter day in holy Benares, in the 1940s, that I met Peer A. Westin. He came gliding along by the shore where the washermen were busy splashing the dirty linen of respectable egojis [Sunyata's affectionate name for all embodied jivas]. I was sharing my leftover food with donkey friends, as human friends would always give me too much to eat. Peer seemed touched by my donkey friendship. Birds of a feather and kindred asses flock together! Peer was in a body of some twenty-five summers – tall, dark and slim. He was studious looking, civilised, respectable and balanced. His upper lip had been slightly damaged by some explosion [he had received] during military duty. I detected a slight stoop ... . We went together to see some sadhus,

The Power of the Presence

gurus and learned pandits in the holy Benares. One Guru fastened on Peer the name 'Sri Hanuman'. I was not much impressed by the competence of that guru nor with the name he gave to Peer. Since Peer had been in holy Bharat only a short while then, I felt he would eventually find his due path. 'Step by step as thou goest, the Way will open unto thee.'<sup>1</sup>

The two soon became friends. When summer came Sunyata invited Peer to stay with him in Almora:

Peer came to my Himalayan retreat in the spring when the heat came upon the plains. He stayed in my upper Sunya cave on the hill's crest. It had vast scenic views and a vaster expanse of silence. He imbibed the gracious solitude in the pure, Krishna-blue azure realm, while Paramahansa wings grew and unfurled. He had the psychological urge towards stark openness and nudeness. It was the need of being natural, without the rags of ego deceit, artificial respectability or artistic hiding. In this purity, the mental fig leaves become positively indecent or a kind of vulgar prudery.

Sunyata

Peer felt right in that Himalayan setting with nature, with books and a rich inner life. In the outer play there was the ringing self-radiant Silence, the winds in the pines below, and the crescendoing of Aums. I left Peer alone except for an occasional service and chat. Sometimes we played naturally, nakedly together, raking pine needles, or cutting grass or wood – all part of our Himalayan contemplation.

Peer Westin had been awarded a two-year scholarship in India to study religious and philosophical lore, but he renounced it all when he took to yoga and intensive self-enquiry. I later introduced him to Maharshi Ramana in Tiruvannamalai. In and through Maharshi he eventually came to full 'awakening', conscious 'Self-awareness', or 'advaita experiencing'. Hanuman, the name given to him in Varanasi dropped off and 'Ramanagiri' [Ramana Mountain], conferred on him by Ramana Maharshi, emerged. Comparisons are odious, yet Maharshi Ramana is Himalayan to many current molehills and tinpot, claptrap gurus. Peer was blessed in Maharshi's grace and sahaja recognition.

---

<sup>1</sup> Dancing with the Void, by Sunyata. All accounts by Sunyata in this chapter come from chapter ten, pp. 59-63.

When I met him first, I asserted nothing. Himalaya and Sunyata have no need to assert. I could sense in him a certain Swedish occultism and an intense longing to realise the truth. Ramanagiri later came through an ancient road, a homeward way, frequented by the wholly awakened ones. Here all mental concepts and ideals vanish. Only awareness remains, bereft of all theories and ideal abstractions. It is the serene state of exalted calm in absolute Silence. It has been called nirvana, or turiya [the fourth] or sunya [emptiness]. Ramanagiri was in this state of 'advaita experiencing'. I did pranam to Ramanagiri in glad homage, in karuna love and in Himalayan ananda gratitude. Upon leaving my place he went on a pilgrimage. His Jiva Yatra [soul's pilgrimage] was lived mostly in South India, by seashores, in jungles and at the grail-glowing holy mountain, Arunachala.

At some point, when he was still living in Benares, Peer took sannyasa via a formal initiation. I don't know the name of his diksha [initiation] guru; he is simply referred to as a 'holy man of Benares'. On taking sannyasa Peer renounced both his academic studies and his personal fortune, which apparently amounted to over eight million dollars.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Most of the unattributed material on Swami Ramanagiri in this chapter comes from an article I wrote about Swami Ramanagiri that was published in The Mountain Path, 1994, pp. 144-8. This article took most of its information from another account, by Prof. K. C. Sashi, that

The Power of the Presence

At the time of his initiation his diksha guru stipulated that he should never ask for anything, and only accept what was offered to him. On the day following his initiation he passed by a friend's house, but his friend failed to recognise him because of his shaved head and orange robes.

When he saw the sannyasin, he shouted to his wife, 'A mendicant is going by! Give him the rotten bananas!' This was his first bhiksha [food obtained by begging].

On the following day he was walking in front of the palace of the Raja of Benares when a soldier accosted him and asked him to step inside.

'Why?' asked the swami.

The soldier replied that it was the practice of the raja to offer food daily to the first sannyasin he saw walking in front of the palace gates. So, on that day, he was taken in, accorded a royal reception, and given a feast, personally served by the raja himself.

When he later narrated both of these incidents to his diksha guru, he was told that both should be treated with equal indifference, as food is only for physical sustenance. For the rest of his brief life he never asked for anything and never handled money.

In early 1949 he came to Tiruvannamalai to meet Bhagavan for the first time. Though he had a natural inclination for raja yoga, having practised it for years, Swami Ramanagiri felt an immediate attraction to self-enquiry, the path of Sri Ramana. Since this was a departure from the practical teachings he had been taught by his diksha guru, Swami Ramanagiri felt that he should consult him about this change of direction. The diksha guru let him know that Bhagavan was his true Guru, and he encouraged him to follow the teachings he was being given at Ramanasramam. Swami Ramanagiri then practised enquiry intensively for forty days in Bhagavan's presence and was rewarded, on Sivaratri day 1949, with a direct experience of the Self.

---

was published in The Mountain Path in 1986, pp. 71-4. Prof. K. C. Sashi knew Swami Ramanagiri personally and much of what he wrote there was derived from personal contact with the swami. This 1986 article has the most complete account of Swami Ramanagiri's life that I have come across.

When asked later about what had happened on that momentous day, he would usually say, 'On that day I became a fool'.

For the rest of his life he referred to himself in the third person as 'this fool'. Speaking of the effect this experience had had on him, he wrote in one of his notebooks:

I don't know anything, and that 'I' which knows is nothing but an ignorant fool.
I think, when I don't think, that I have no end and no beginning.
That which thinks has to take thousands of births.
When there is 'I', He is not;
when He is, I am not.

How did he practise self-enquiry? Certainly not in the classical way prescribed by Bhagavan. It was his own idiosyncratic method, combining classical vichara [enquiry], pranayama [breath control], a little neti-neti [not-this, not-this], and a few imaginative visualisations. Some interesting insights into his method can be gleaned from the following long letter that he wrote to Prof. K. C. Sashi. He began by saying:

In the course of sadhana, maya first comes to the sincere soul in the form of worldly troubles; second in the form of desires, and third in the form of dear friends who keep him away from the quest.

He had had his own experiences of 'dear friends' who kept him away from the quest. In one of his notebooks he wrote: 'Three years ago I found that letters from my previous family became an obstacle on the spiritual quest, so whenever any letter came, I never opened it or read it. I experienced that the divine was on my side in spite of my improper action.'

He continued with his spiritual advice with the following words:

Our own mind is the greatest cheater in the world. It will make thousands of different reasons to go its own way. There are three ways of handling this cheat, who is nothing but a bundle of thoughts creeping into the conscious mind.

The Power of the Presence

First, to treat him as a friend and give him full satisfaction. This is a very long and tiresome way because he is never satisfied.

Second, to treat him as an enemy and with all force try to get rid of him. This is only possible by the grace of the divine because the mind has got two very powerful weapons – the discriminating intellect and the imaginative faculty. These two fellows can convince even God himself that black is white.

The third way is the way taught by Sri Ramana in the days of silence at the foot of sacred Arunachala. This way, which has been adopted by this fool, is to treat the mind as a patient, or rather several patients who are coming to a doctor to complain about their various ailments. Just as a doctor sits in his room receiving different kinds of patients, this fool imagines himself sitting in the sacred cave of the Heart and receiving the different thought-patients. You know that a sick person likes to babble for hours about his complaint. In the same way a thought likes to multiply itself, but the doctor always cuts it short, saying, 'Very good. Take this medicine. Thank you very much.' And then he calls for another patient.

This is how this fool decided to meditate. First the fool slows down his breath as much as possible, but only to the point where there is no discomfort. To this fool, two breaths per minute is the proper speed, but that may not be possible for you because this fool has practised for a long time. You may be able to decrease your breathing to 8-10 per minute in the beginning. Don't get to a level where you are uncomfortable, because that discomfort will give rise to thoughts.

This fool decided to receive twenty patients before closing the dispensary of the Heart. He calls out 'Number one!' and he waits for thought patient number one to come. The thought patient may say, 'Smt such-and-such is not well. Sri so-and-so is worried.'

Then this foolish doctor says, 'Oh, you are number one. Very good. The name of Lord Murugan will cure you. Thank you very much.'

Then he calls for number two, and he waits till the second patient is entering the room. 'Mr so-and-so may get mukti this life,' he says.

'Very good. You are number two. The whole world is benefited if one soul gets liberated. Thank you very much.'

Numbers three, four, five, and so on are dealt with in the same way.

When all the twenty thought patients have come and gone, the doctor closes the room to the Heart, and no one else is allowed to come inside. Now he is alone. Now there is time for atma-vichara [self-enquiry].

He asks himself, 'To whom have all these thoughts come?'

Three times he slowly repeats the same question, along with the outgoing breaths. Then he, in that same slow manner, answers, 'To me, to me, to me'.

'Then who am I? Then who am I? Then who am I?' All questions and answers are repeated three times, very slowly.

'This "I" is not a thought. This "I" is not a thought. This "I" is not a thought.'

'Then who is the receiver of the thought? Then who is the receiver of the thought? Then who is the receiver of the thought?'

'"I" - "I" - "I"' Now the mind is centralised in the source itself.

'Then who am I? Then who am I? Then who am I?'

Now the breath comes to an end and the attention is concentrated 100% on the sound caused by the palpitation of the heart, as if the sound would give the answer to our questions. This is nothing but the pranava [sound of om] itself. If, during this time, the sakti which was static is converted to movements or becomes dynamic, trance will occur. If the primal energy reaches the space between the eyebrows, savikalpa samadhi will occur. If the energy rises up to the top of the head, nirvikalpa samadhi will occur, which is nothing but the Self itself.<sup>3</sup>

The Power of the Presence

But you should also know that even if the doctor has closed the dispensary door, some patients may come and peep in through the window to complain about their ailments. At the beginning of self-enquiry, the patients at the window are many. In the same way, although the door to the cave of the Heart is closed, some thoughts may occur at the time of dhyana [meditation].

For example, a thought may come: 'Mr Iyer's sushumna nadi<sup>4</sup> has opened up.'

Since the patient has not come at the proper time, the doctor doesn't attend to him. Instead, he continues the quest: 'To whom has the thought of Mr Iyer come?'

'To me, to me, to me.'

'Then who am I? Then who am I? Then who am I?'

Dearest 'S'. In all humility this fool has babbled something about how he tries to establish himself in the experience of ananda, which is no different from the Self itself.

With all my love to you.

Ramanagiri in Him

Om

I don't know how long Swami Ramanagiri stayed with Bhagavan. At some point he returned to Almora, for it was there, in March 1950, that he had a premonition that Bhagavan was about to pass away. The narrative is now taken up by an anonymous writer who calls himself 'A. Chela'.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> Savikalpa samadhi is a samadhi attained and maintained by an intense mental focus. Nirvikalpa samadhi is a samadhi in which one becomes absorbed in the Self without having any awareness of one's body or the external world.

<sup>4</sup> The channel through which kundalini may rise from the base of the spine to the sahasrara, the chakra located above the top of the head.

At the time Bhagavan Ramana's nirvana was approaching, Swamiji was staying in Almora in the Himalayas. About two weeks before the event Swamiji had a psychic message from Bhagavan, his Guru, about his impending nirvana. Swamiji made haste to reach Tiruvannamalai and the ashram.

Swami Ramanagiri made it to Ramanasramam in time. On the black-and-white film that was taken around the time of Bhagavan's passing away he can be seen paying his respects to the body of Bhagavan shortly before it was interred. In the line of people filing past the body he is the tall, thin foreigner with long hair. A. Chela continues with his story:

After the Mahasamadhi of Bhagavan he [Swami Ramanagiri] wanted to go back to the Himalayas. En route he was persuaded by a friend to spend a few days at Madras with him. One day, as he was walking along the beach, he had a vision of Bhagavan who, signalling with his hand, directed him to proceed further south and stay there. This led him to Tiruvanmiyur, then a fishing village, but nowadays [this was written in 1977] a part of the fast-growing city of Madras.

*Swami Ramanagiri
sitting on the beach*

Here he sat on the beach immersed in samadhi. His host, not knowing where his revered guest had gone, grew <sup>5</sup> 'A. Chela' is a pen name that translates as 'A disciple'. He was clearly a disciple and close associate of Swami Ramanagiri. His account appeared in an article entitled 'The Guru' that was published in The Mountain Path, 1980, p. 229.

The Power of the Presence

anxious. A search was organised and Swamiji was at last located sitting on the beach under the scorching sun, deep in samadhi. When he came back to the physical plane, he was requested to return to his host's residence. However, Swamiji said that Bhagavan had directed him to stay there at the seaside, and so stay there he would. So his host decided to put up a hut with dried coconut palm leaves for him on the beach. Arrangements were made by his host for food to be sent to him daily.

Often, when the fishermen would swarm around Swamiji, he would give the food meant for himself to them. On other occasions he would be in samadhi, totally unaware of the needs of his body. It was this continued neglect which brought on the tuberculosis which ultimately consumed his body. At first he refused treatment but was persuaded by his host, whom he treated as his father, to go back to the city for treatment.

During his time on the beach he began to attract devotees. He always refused to play the role of the Guru, saying that this was not a mission that Bhagavan had given to him, but nevertheless, he did attract disciples and he did end up advising them on spiritual matters. In the next story A. Chela describes how he ended up becoming a devotee:

At this time in 1950, I was stationed in Delhi. One day in September or October my immediate superior paid a visit to Delhi and stayed with me as my guest. On the first morning of his visit he finished his ablutions early and took out from his bag a photograph of Swamiji, placed it on the table, lighted a few incense sticks and sat down for meditation. One look at the photograph and my heart seemed to stand still. I was absolutely captivated by the radiant personality in the photograph, and I wanted to know all about him.

My guest, after completing his meditation, told me the story of Swami Ramanagiri. I then asked him eagerly: 'Will you take me to him?'

To this, he replied: 'Yes, when you next come to Madras.'

Most unexpectedly, and to my great good fortune, I was transferred to Madras in January, 1951. On reporting for duty there, almost the first thing I asked my superior was when he would take me to the Swamiji. He said he was going to him that very evening, and that I could come with him.

Hardly able to contain my excitement, I went through the work of the day and immediately rushed to the officer's chamber. Imagine my consternation when I found it empty. And imagine too my feelings when the watchman told me that my superior officer had left early. Feeling sullen and angry, I waited around restlessly, not knowing what to do in this predicament. And then, slowly, a question formed in my mind. Why should I not go and see the Swamiji by myself? After all, to meet a sannyasi, no formal introduction is necessary. Having convinced myself of the rightness of my proposed action, I started off. Fortunately, my destination was within walking distance.

I came to know later that when my superior reached the Swamiji, the latter, who was observing a vow of silence at that time, wrote on a slate: 'Someone wanted to come with you. Why did you not bring him?' My superior, also an ardent devotee of the Swamiji, then realised that in his eagerness to meet Swamiji he had forgotten all about poor me. He therefore offered to fetch me, but the Swamiji wrote on the slate: 'Don't worry. He will come by himself.'

A little later I walked in. When I saw Swamiji, I felt so thrilled that my head began to reel, and I became confused.

'My God, I am in the presence of Christ!' were the words that formed in my mind (Swamiji had a really remarkable resemblance to Jesus in all aspects). This lasted for some minutes.

I do not remember if I even made a namaskar. I saw Swamiji write on the slate: 'This is the person' and show it to my boss. I didn't know what all this writing was about and, frankly, I was not even interested. I just sat there in awe and reverence for some time and, after a time, I made a pranam and left.

The Power of the Presence

It was only during the next few days that I realised I had said or done nothing during my first visit to the Swamiji. What had I achieved? Nothing. I had to speak to him and be accepted as a disciple. This was imperative. So, a few days later, I went to see Swamiji again. This time I found he was not observing silence and that I could talk to him. However, there were already two other people there, and he was talking to them. But, strangely I found I was not feeling impatient, only indescribably happy to be in his presence.

As time passed and it grew dark, a sudden fear assailed me. Would this meeting also prove fruitless? I looked towards the Swamiji. He had suddenly become serious and was looking out of the window. Then I saw him close his eyes. I also closed my eyes. Everything became very still. I had not known such deep silence and calm before. Then, abruptly, I felt jolted by what I can only call a shock in my heart which shook me and, simultaneously, a tremendous pull from Swamiji like that of a jet engine sucking air. My whole being seemed to go totally still but I felt no panic, only a great peace enveloping me. My Guru had pierced my heart and taken my mind in very deep into it. Mentally I asked Swamiji: 'Will you please take me as your disciple?'

The answer 'Yes' was also an unspoken one. But it was a very firm and unhesitating 'Yes'.

After this experience, it seemed as if Swamiji and I both opened our eyes simultaneously and looked at each other. Swamiji bent towards me with a bewitching smile and peered into my eyes, as if enquiring if I had received his message, and if I was happy and satisfied with it. What joy and relief that look gave me! I knew I had been accepted as a disciple. That was enough. I offered a pranam and left.

How he led me from then on is, of course, another story!

At the beginning of his account A. Chela described how Bhagavan had somehow commanded Swami Ramanagiri to stay on the beach. This 'command' was given soon after he had had a vision of him in the Theosophical Society in southern Madras.

Swami Ramanagiri

Swami Ramanagiri described the experience and its aftermath in a letter he wrote to Sunyata:

Dearest Sunya,

In this letter I must tell you that I have sailed away. I have sailed to a far-off place, a place which cannot be described by words. To describe it is to pollute it. The steamer on which I sailed is a very powerful one, but it rolls hard in the sea if the weather is stormy. The place is called by many names, but still no name can cover its reality. Some used to call the place

Swami Ramanagiri sitting in meditation

nirvikalpa, others satchitananda [being-consciousness-bliss] or nirguna Brahman [unmanifest Brahman] – some call it God or Self, others call it pure consciousness or the egoless state. To describe it I have to put up a big wall before it. The name of the steamer is 'mind'. With the help of prana [the life force] one reaches the place that for the jiva seems so far away but, really speaking, is nearer than one's own breath. If the sense-weather is stormy, the steamer will roll badly on the samsaric ocean. By now, you must understand the art of my sailing, and why I have been so silent.

Let me tell you what happened and why I have been so silent. The same day as I was going back to North India I visited the Theosophical Library at Adyar. And while walking in the garden, Sri Bhagavan Ramana Maharshi appeared before me. He asked me to follow him. I went along the seacoast to a little place where I sat down for meditation. There Sri Bhagavan's voice told me that my only duty (dharma) from now onwards was the Self. Further, he gave me some upadesa which I followed for some days. One night, between 12 and 2, kundalini was aroused to sahasrara and the jiva merged into the Self. On account on the sound Om from the waves of the sea, I was brought back to body awareness; otherwise I would have left my body because in that state there is no one to come back, and no one to make any effort. After having regained body-consciousness, I discovered that I had lost all my memory.

The Power of the Presence

All events before the time of Sri Bhagavan's appearance in the garden had gone out of my mind. Friends who had been very close to me looked like strangers. People whom I thought I had never met before came and told me that we had met in Madras only a few days before. Everyone and everything looked so new and strange and unreal. Now I am getting back my memory, but mostly recollections connected with spiritual experiences and deep love. That is why I am writing to you, because those who are near my heart turn up again in this mind, which is so different from the previous one.

Swami Ramanagiri. The four circular marks come from a puja that was done to the body.

The village people have built a little hut for me, but there is no post office in this little fishing village, the name of which I do not even know, so I cannot give you any address yet. I don't think any postman will take the trouble to come down to the sandy beach, but I shall let you know later.

With all my love

Ramanagiri in Him

The stay in Madras proved to be a short one. A few months later Swami Ramanagiri received another message from Bhagavan, telling him to go to Madurai. While he was there, wandering around in the countryside, Bhagavan appeared before him in a vision and directed him to go and stay in the Sirumalai Hills, about twenty miles from Madurai. He spent the rest of his short life there, continuing his practice of yoga and enquiry. He frequently became absorbed in ecstatic or blissful states, so much so that he had little awareness of his body or its needs. Of one experience he wrote:

The whole night

Nothing but fire, light, bliss and pranava.

O Father! O Father! What happiness!

No thought, only the enjoyment and the enjoyer.

O Father! How near I was to losing myself completely in your embrace.

O Father, why do you turn me back to the state of the mind
Where I suffer from thoughts and where I am tormented by an ego?

In a more sober and reflective mood he made the following assessment of the blissful states he was experiencing through his pranayama and self-enquiry:

Bliss is not a product of fantasy, but the most convincing experience we are capable of. If this experience would be a product of the imagination, the hair would not stand on end, nor would tears of happiness come in streams from the eyes, nor would the nose start flowing, nor would there be any shivering of the body, the skin would not turn red-hot, and there would be no levitation of the body. How many times have I found the body at another place in the room after having enjoyed Mother's bliss. In padmasana the body is not capable of moving.

Swami Ramanagiri eventually contracted tuberculosis, a disease which claimed him at the young age of thirty-four, in

The Power of the Presence

1955. He spent his final days in the Perundurai Sanitorium. Though his body was lean and emaciated, his spirits were high.

‘It is the body which suffers,’ he told his visitors. ‘I am all right. Sakti is now stronger than ever before, and it is here [indicating a spot between the eyebrows].’

It was summer and mangoes were just beginning to appear. Accepting some as an offering, he alluded to his forthcoming death by saying, ‘I will eat a nice mango now, but it will become garbage tomorrow morning’.

For more than an hour before his death he was completely withdrawn in a deep meditative state, with his hair standing on end. At his last moment he whispered, ‘Let us go,’ and he left his body in true yogic fashion, through the fontanelle in the top of his head. Blood was seen to ooze out of a hole there.

His body was interred at the foot of the Sirumulai Hills, at a place he had named ‘Ramana Padam’, and a Siva lingam was installed over his samadhi. Twice a year there are gatherings at the shrine to commemorate the day of his great experience with Bhagavan, and the date of his final passing away. A poor feeding is conducted and crowds of over 2,000 assemble to pay homage to this foreign son of India.

During his stay in the Sirumalai Hills a devotee called Ramachandran persuaded

Swami Ramanagiri sitting in an unknown temple

A view from the roof of Swami Ramanagiri's samadhi shrine

Swami Ramanagiri to write down a few words every day. Though he had little interest in writing or in recording his thoughts and experiences, Swami Ramanagiri agreed. He gave these notes the title 'Cold Fire,' which seems to be a reference to the way he perceived the Divine Mother's grace working on him. In one of his notebook entries he wrote: 'Your steps are so gentle, Your voice so sweet, and Your touch so tender. Mother's nature is that of a cooling fire.'

This is how he began his notebook:

Beloved Ramachandran has asked this fool, at least for his sake, to write a word every day, and my dearest Ramu [Ramachandran ] is deluded by maya, so he has given this big book.

The 'Cold Fire' manuscript that I was given<sup>6</sup> contains statements and advice that other devotees say was sent to them by Swami Ramanagiri in letters. It is probably a mixture of advice sent out through the post and stray thoughts written down in the privacy of his room. Here is a selection of material that appears there:

His Name, taken once with wholehearted love and a one-pointed mind, is worth more than the knowledge collected from every book all over the world.

Learning is learned ignorance. Unlearning is learning.

What you speak about others doesn't reveal anything about them, but about you.

The power of listening attracts more than the power of speaking.

---

<sup>6</sup> I first saw a copy of this in the 1980s. It was in the form of a carbon copy of a typed manuscript. The manuscript seems to have been circulated but never published. I have subsequently come across other identical copies that were given to devotees who expressed an interest in Swami Ramanagiri's writings.

The Power of the Presence

Jnana and bhakti are not separate from each other. One cannot know Him without loving Him, and one cannot love Him without knowing Him.

Non-attachment does not mean indifference; love does not mean attachment; attachment is that which takes; love is that which gives.

Shut the doors and the door will be opened.

Religion is experience. It should be practised, not studied or discussed, and at the very least not preached. Those who preach don't know; those who know don't preach.

About your worldly troubles: you must do as you think best yourself, but it is good policy to keep out from others' plates, however sweet and inviting they look. Both sugar and arsenic are white.

When a soul turns his mind towards the divine, the following two things will happen. First, he will get some joyful experience, which shows that he is on the right path, and that he is progressing. Second, when the asuric [demonic] forces see that he is progressing, they will put every possible obstacle before the sadhaka in the form of worldly troubles, mental botherations and sex urges. I think you have reached that second stage and will get further troubles. But don't mind. They are good in so far as they make us fed up with the world.

Swami Ramanagiri striding along a South Indian road.

If the ego is allowed to play with our emotions, it is capable of causing havoc. Only by drawing the ego to its source can the saddest feeling be converted into ananda.

Perfection in any form is the manifestation of the divine.

The greatest service to humanity is self-enquiry, and the greatest remedy for this world is Self-realisation, but that does not mean that we should not do anything for others. As long as we have not got the power to withdraw the mind from the objects of sense perceptions, we should do, and must do, whatever we can for others. Selfless activity will soon give the power of introversion, but when the mind has become introverted, we should not spoil what we have gained by outward activity.

The main thing with worship is not what we worship, but that we worship, and if we have got love, we can easily surrender the feeling of 'I' which is the wall between ourselves and God.

The disciple's love for the Guru is more important than the Guru's power.

The behaviour of a fool and a wise man is the same. The only difference is that a fool goes from life to lives while a wise man goes from lives to Life. One leaves the ocean behind; the other returns.

To speak or write about Him is pollution. The only truth which becomes falsehood when expressed is aham Brahmasmi [I am Brahman] or Sivoham [I am Siva].

The best weapon of defence is ahimsa [non-violence]. The best weapon of offence is love.

The ego will cry like a mad man when he sees that he is going to be killed.

The Power of the Presence

The human body is the greatest hindrance in realising the Self, but it is also the only means.

O Mother! What a painful bliss you gave this child! Mother is always the same, but we are different, depending on the purity of the body, mind and heart. That is why Mother's bliss sometimes gives extreme pain, sometimes extreme joy.

Renunciation of that which renounces is renunciation.

In my father's lap, Mother, Father and I are one; or there is none; but IT is.

To become bliss is very different from enjoying it.

Last evening I could not get to sleep on account of some noisy music going on nearby. So, I was lying and mentally repeating the pranava. Suddenly everything became so quiet, so quiet that it gave me a surprise that it could ever be so quiet. Then I found myself floating on a most beautiful silvery ocean. Then the body started to move backwards on the surface as if taken away by some stream. I did not do anything to or for [it] as I enjoyed the effortless moving like a little leaf in a big, big river. Then I regained the waking consciousness on account of a terrible shaking as if an earthquake had broken out and Mother started to climb the dreadful back of Mount Meru. My first thought was: 'I

Swami Ramanagiri leaning on his stick, with a home-made kamandalu (water pot) in his other hand.

had better be in a sitting position if samadhi occurs.' Along with that thought I contracted the anus so that Mother might not return. That made the upper portion of the body swing up like a spring without the help of any muscular effort except for the contraction of the anus. The result was that the whole body [rose] into the air ... . As long as I was contracting the anus, the body was hanging self-suspended in the air. When I released the contraction, the body came down again in the bed. I felt very sad, and was on the point of weeping, because Mother returned and I did not get samadhi. Again I felt I was a prey to these rubbish powers, which do not make a person more spiritual. On the contrary it gives ego, and that too a very bad and strong one, which is very, very difficult to overcome.<sup>7</sup>

We are imprisoned within the walls of our thoughts.

Out of all human beings, 108 are chosen. Out of these 108, nine are selected. Out of these nine, seven go mad. One goes knowingly back to maya, and one goes to the Supreme.

O Father, why have you taken me to this place? It must be the hell. I suffer badly here. Even the worst torture loses its grip in sleep, but here there is no sleep. I weep without tears, and I have lost even the last power: the power to pray. I feel like a dog running after its own tail, without getting tired. After an endless time of darkness, a little squirrel came and sat before me. I asked the little squirrel, 'Have you also come to run after your tail? Or are you a messenger from my father?' The little squirrel smiled and ran away. The appearance of the squirrel caused a thrilling sensation of joy and two tears came into the right eye. The first tear gave me back my faith; the other gave me the strength to pray.

---

<sup>7</sup> While this is clearly a description of a levitation experience, the cryptic language makes it hard to make out whether it is something that he indulged in (by 'closing the anus' to keep Mother away) and later regretted, or something that just happened spontaneously.

The Power of the Presence

O Father, let every human being be happy. Let every creature have peace and blessings. Help the parents who once gave me a gross form to realise You. Help every dear and near one. Father, father, do not give me ego or mind. Make me simple and humble and let me always speak the truth. Father, may I always shun money, and do not give me any sexual thought, desire or dream... OM SHANTI OM SHANTI OM SHANTI.

After days and nights in prayer, the little squirrel again came and sat before me and asked: 'Who is suffering? Who is praying?'

There are no secret doctrines, no secret masters, no secret teaching, and no secret India, only secret authors. Their secret is fame and money. What is the use of giving food if it is not to be eaten? Would you call food not offered 'secret'?

One doesn't take to sadhana out of miseries, but on account of happiness. Only a happy person can become a good yogi. Nor does one take to sannyasa because one has lost something, but because one has gained something.

It's a play with toys, but not a play for children. It is a mad play, and when one doesn't know it's a play, one suffers badly. Meditation is for the strong, not the weak.

I feel a boiling pressure in the region of the navel and a kind of nervousness as if I was going to appear in an important examination. I cannot sleep any more. As soon as I lie down I get electric shocks in different parts of the body, and when it occurs in the head, I go mad. As long as we try to balance on the razor's edge, we are bound to fall and cut ourselves to pieces, but we have to try till we give up trying. It is not a question of balancing, but balancing without effort.

By the help of the intellect we get discrimination; by experience we get knowledge.

Swami Ramanagiri

Mother's bliss is just like a thrilling screw of boundless joy inserted into every cell of the body.

Discrimination is our destiny.

Lord Ramana, Lord Subramania, Lord Siva, my Father and the Self are one and the same. Mother is His tool, Arunagiri their child, and Ramanagiri this fool.

Viswanatha Swami

Sri Viswanatha Swami (1904-79) was a distant relative of Bhagavan. His father, a cousin of Bhagavan, had been brought up by Bhagavan's mother in Tiruchuzhi. In his youth Viswanatha was an active Gandhian, but his political activities petered out after he came under the influence of Bhagavan in 1921. From 1922 until 1950 he spent most of his time either with Bhagavan or with Kavyakantha Ganapati Muni.

Sri Viswanatha Swami was a good Tamil and Sanskrit scholar. In addition to translating several Ramanasramam publications from English and Sanskrit into Tamil, he also translated works by Swami Ramdas and Mahatma Gandhi. Towards the end of his life he was the editor of The Mountain Path, the journal published by Sri Ramanasramam.

Sri Viswanatha Swami was one of the most widely respected of Bhagavan's devotees. In fact, when Bhagavan passed away, a committee which had been formed to manage the ashram recommended that he and Muruganar should be allowed to remain in Sri Ramanasramam forever, without any work being assigned to them, because they best embodied the spirit of Bhagavan and his teachings.

Although Sri Viswanatha Swami was happy to record the experiences that other devotees had had with Bhagavan, he was rather reluctant to write about himself. This reluctance stemmed partly from his innate humility and partly from an inability to communicate in words the nature of the transformation that Bhagavan effected in him. He once wrote: 'Sri Bhagavan's most powerful presence completely annihilated my ego; I can't say anything more.'

My first darshan of Bhagavan Sri Ramana was in January 1921 at Skandashram. Located on the eastern slope of Arunachala, Skandashram looks from a distance like the very heart of the majestic hill. It was, and still is, a beautiful, quiet spot with a few coconut and other trees, and a perennial, crystal-clear spring.

When I first saw Bhagavan, I saw in him something quite arresting which clearly distinguished him from all others I had seen. He seemed to live apart from the physical frame, quite detached from it. His look and smile had a remarkable spiritual charm. When he spoke, the words seemed to come out of an abyss. One could see immaculate purity and non-attachment in him and his movements. I sensed something very refined, lofty and sacred about him. In his vicinity the mind's distractions were overpowered by an austere and potent calmness. In his presence the unique bliss of peace was directly experienced. This I would call Ramana Lahari, 'The blissful atmosphere of Ramana'. In this ecstasy of grace one loses one's sense of separate individuality and there remains something grand and all-pervading, all-devouring. This indeed is the spirit of Arunachala that swallows up the whole universe in its gracious effulgence.

When I first saw Bhagavan, he was standing on the open space in front of the ashram building. The very sight of him thrilled me. Something very subtle, seemingly with its centre in that body, shone forth, without limitation, engulfing everything else.

Bhagavan sitting near Skandashram around the time that Viswanatha Swami first met him.

The Power of the Presence

Needless to say I felt swallowed up by it. I stayed for a week with Bhagavan in that atmosphere of utter purity and serenity. I heard from him how he had come to Arunachala, irresistibly attracted and swept off his feet by a tremendous benevolent force; how, deep down within his heart, he was one with that power. I also learned that after his arrival at Arunachala he had been almost oblivious of his body and surroundings. I was told that it was only later on that he gradually regained the use of his senses, enabling him to look outwards and commune with others when they approached him.

On my first visit there were about ten devotees living with him, including his mother and younger brother. One of them was Vallimalai Murugan who, for a while every morning, sang the

Viswanatha Swami (top right) sitting with Bhagavan on the hill, probably on his first visit. Ramaswami Pillai is on his right.

Tamil songs of the Tiruppugazh with great fervour. These well-known songs, the remarkable outpourings of the famous saint Sri Arunagirinatha, are songs in praise of Subramaniam. When he sang, Bhagavan used to keep time by tapping with two small sticks on the two rings of an iron brazier of live charcoal that was kept in front of him. Fumes of incense spread out in rolls from the brazier, suffused with the subtle holy atmosphere of Bhagavan. While Bhagavan's hands were tapping at the brazier in this way, his unfathomable look of grace gave one a glimpse of the beyond in silence. It was an unforgettable experience.

There was also a devotee from Chidambaram, Subramanya Iyer, who often sang with great fervour the hymns in praise of Arunachala written by Bhagavan, songs in praise of Bhagavan written by his devotees, and hymns from the Tiruvachakam. One morning, when he began a song with the refrain Ramana Sadguru, Ramana Sadguru, Ramana Sadguru rayane, Bhagavan also joined in the singing. The devotees were amused and began to laugh at Bhagavan himself singing his own praise.

While they were expressing their amusement, Bhagavan commented, 'What is extraordinary about it? Why should one limit Ramana to a form of six feet? Is it not the all-pervading divinity that you adore when you sing "Ramana Sadguru, Ramana Sadguru"? Why should I not also join in the singing?' We all felt lifted to Bhagavan's standpoint.

Before beginning their day's work, the inmates of the ashram would get up at dawn and sing some devotional songs in praise of both Arunachala and Bhagavan Ramana. During one of these sessions, after Niranjanananda Swami had told Bhagavan that I could recite hymns in Sanskrit, Bhagavan looked at me expectantly. Seeing that it was impossible to avoid it, I recited a few verses.

When I had finished Bhagavan gently looked at me and said, 'You have learned all this. Not so in my case. Before I came here I knew nothing and had learned nothing. Some mysterious power took possession of me and effected a thorough transformation. Whoever knew then what was happening to me? Your father, who was intending in his boyhood to go to the Himalayas for tapas, became the head of a big family. And I, who knew nothing, have been drawn and kept here for good! When I left home in my seventeenth year, I was like a speck swept away by a tremendous flood. I knew neither my body nor the world, whether it was day or night. It was difficult even to open my eyes – the eyelids seemed to be glued down. My body became a mere skeleton. Visitors pitied my plight because they were not aware how blissful I was. It was only years later that I came across the term 'Brahman' when I happened to look into some books on Vedanta which had been brought to me. I was amused and said to myself, 'Is this [experience or state] known as Brahman?'

The Power of the Presence

One of the earliest of Bhagavan's devotees, Sivaprakasam Pillai, has referred to this early ignorance at the beginning of Sri Ramana Charita Ahaval, his brief Tamil verse biography of Bhagavan. In that work he called Bhagavan, 'One who became a knower of Brahman without knowing even the term Brahman'.

Finding that I knew a little Sanskrit, Bhagavan asked me to take a copy of Sri Ramana Gita and give it to my father. I did so, and it was only after going through it that my father understood Bhagavan. At that time I had not studied its contents myself.

It was only at the end of 1922 that I happened to go through the thrilling verses in praise of Bhagavan Ramana that comprise the eighteenth chapter. I was so profoundly moved by them, I made up my mind to return to Bhagavan for good. I had already been thinking of dedicating myself solely to spiritual pursuits. It was the reading of Sri Ramana Gita at this critical juncture of my life that made me decide that my spiritual future lay with Bhagavan.

I returned to Bhagavan for good on the evening of January 2nd 1923 and surrendered myself at his feet. Just a fortnight before that date, Bhagavan had come down the hill to live near his mother's samadhi. His mother had been liberated by him in May 1922 but it was not until December of that year that he took up full-time residence near her grave. The new ashram was in a very primitive state at that time. There were only two huts made of coconut leaves, one being the living quarters and the other the kitchen. I entered the hut where Bhagavan was staying and saw him reclining peacefully on an elevated dais.

Sivaprakasam Pillai

As I bowed and stood before him, he asked me, 'Did you get the permission of your parents to come here?'

Bhagavan must have sensed that I had run away from home, without telling anyone. I had not informed my family because I knew that my father would never have given me permission to live full-time with Bhagavan. I tried to evade the question by telling Bhagavan that since he himself had irresistibly attracted me to his feet, it was not necessary for him to ask such a question. With a smile, Bhagavan advised me to inform my parents of my whereabouts so that they would not worry about what I had done. I wrote to my father the next day and saw his letter to the ashram enquiring about me the day after.

Viswanatha Swami sitting with Bhagavan in the late 1920s.

The Power of the Presence

I soon discovered that the power and the presence of Bhagavan were so strong, there was no necessity to undertake any formal kind of sadhana. I shared in the work of the ashram in Bhagavan's elevating company, I studied his literary works and I heard his replies to the various questions put by visitors. But all these activities were incidental. The most important thing was the mere presence, the spiritually uplifting company of Bhagavan. As Bhagavan says in Ulladu Narpadu Anubandham: 'If one associates with sages, where is the need for any other rigorous sadhana? No one looks for a fan when there is the pleasant southern breeze.'

During the course of my stay with Bhagavan, I happened to find a collection of hymns in praise of Sri Ramana recorded in a big bound notebook. Going through it I came across a Hymn of 108 Names of Bhagavan Ramana composed by a man called Sankarananda Bharati of Uttarkashi, who had stayed with Bhagavan on the hill. Going through it I found the name Sri Sringadri-Mathadhisa Bhavitah, which means, 'One revered by the head of the Sringeri Math', and asked Bhagavan what it meant. He told me that the reference was to Sri Narasimha Bharati Swami of Sringeri who, many years before, had intuitively recognised Bhagavan's high state. This man retained his high regard for Bhagavan. If devotees from Tiruvannamalai came to see him, he would generally ask them, 'How is the Bala Yogi [child yogi] of Tiruvannamalai? Is he well?'

As Bhagavan was telling me this, I was transported back in time to the days of my youth and childhood. When I was five years old I had met Sri Narasimha Bharati Swami and received some prasad from his hands. At that time I did not know who he was. Although I was very young, I still remember being impressed by his dignity, his lustre and his spontaneous love.

Years later, when I was thirteen, I happened to be looking at a beautiful collection of Sri Sankara's works in my father's library. Finding one of the books to be of a different size, I took it out and saw that it bore the title, Bhakti-Sudha-Tarangini (Waves of the Nectar of Devotion). As I opened the book, I found in the frontispiece the majestic and lovely figure of the swami who had given me prasad in my sixth year and saw that he was the famous Sri Narasimha Bharati Swami, the head of the Sringeri Math. Though so many years had passed, the impress left on my mind was so vivid, I spontaneously recognised his identity. I went through his short biography in English at the beginning and his thrilling hymns in Sanskrit in praise of the various aspects of divine splendour. I immensely enjoyed his superb devotional poetry. It pleased me to think that this man, who had introduced me to the spiritual life by impressing me with his saintliness, should have had such a high regard for Bhagavan.

A week after I arrived, I got the permission of Bhagavan to live on madhukari, that is, begged food. After giving me permission, Bhagavan reminisced about his own experiences of living this way:

‘I have experience of it myself. I lived on such food during my stay at Pavalakundru [a small hillock in the town of Tiruvannamalai]. I did it to avoid devotees bringing me special rich food. It is altogether different from professional mendicancy. You feel yourself to be independent and indifferent to everything worldly. It has a purifying effect on the mind.’

Viswanatha Swami is sitting on Bhagavan's right. Other devotees include Yogi Ramaiah (front left), Chinna Swami (front right), Munagala Venkataramaiah (sitting on Bhagavan's left) and Annamalai Swami (standing behind Bhagavan).

The Power of the Presence

On the day I arrived at the ashram to stay for good, I noticed that there were many devotees visiting the ashram. They had all assembled for the forty-third birthday of Bhagavan, which was due to be celebrated on the following day. I wanted to ask Bhagavan some questions, but I didn't want to trouble him while all the crowds were milling around him. It was not until after they had all left that I approached him with my problem.

'Bhagavan,' I asked, 'how am I to rise above my present animal existence? My own efforts in that direction have proved futile and I am convinced that only a superior power can transform me. That is what has brought me here.'

Bhagavan replied with great compassion: 'Yes, you are right. It is only by awakening a power mightier than the senses and the mind that these can be subdued. If you awaken and nurture the growth of that power within you, everything else will be conquered. One should sustain the current of meditation uninterruptedly. Moderation in food and similar restraints will be helpful in maintaining the inner poise.'

It was this gracious advice of Bhagavan that gave a new direction to my spiritual career. A new faith was kindled within me and I found in Bhagavan the strength and support to guide me forever.

On another day, when I questioned him about the problem of brahmacharya [celibacy], Bhagavan replied: 'To live and move in Brahman is real brahmacharya. Continence, of course, is very helpful and indispensable to achieve that end. But so long as you identify yourself with the body, you can never escape sex-thoughts and distractions. It is only when you realise that you are formless pure awareness that sex-distinction disappears for good. That is brahmacharya, effortless and spontaneous.'

I also asked him about the nature of the spiritual heart. 'When did you first discover the heart to be on the right side? Did you find it there even in Madurai?'

'Yes,' replied Bhagavan, 'it became clear then. But don't bother about the centre in the physical body, even though we have to accept it to explain the functioning of the individual. Let your attention be rather on the source of consciousness in yourself. It is only after the springing up of the "I"-thought, after it identifies itself with a body, that the problem of the centre arises. You have to go to the very source of the "I"-thought, where there is no limiting "I"-thought and no problems.'

To a devotee who thought that this method would lead to a destruction of the mind and who consequently felt that Self-realisation meant that he would cease to exist, Bhagavan once remarked, 'Many fear that with the destruction of the mind, they themselves will cease to exist. But manonasa [destruction of the mind] is nothing to be feared. What we conceive of now as mind is only a combination of rajas and tamas. By their elimination, the mind becomes pure. Such a mind is one's own swarupa [real nature]. The activities of one whose mind has been purified by Self-attention will continue to be done. He will even appear to do the work with greater attention and involvement. Yet he is unaffected and always stays in the felicity of non-dual bliss.'

*Viswanatha Swami
standing on Arunachala in the 1940s.*

Four months after my arrival at Arunachala, my parents came there to have darshan of Bhagavan and to take me back home. Though they did not succeed in this latter intention, they were somehow consoled by Bhagavan before they returned. He asked them if it were possible to wean a person like me from a course I had taken with all my heart and soul.

Bhagavan told my parents that it would be right for them to try to discourage me from taking a wrong path, but he added, 'Since the course he has taken is intrinsically good, you should not worry about what will happen to him'.

My father was a cousin of Bhagavan. Though he was four or five years older than Bhagavan, he had known him very well as Venkataraman in the days before he left home for Tiruvannamalai. At the time of this first visit he had already heard from others about Bhagavan's spiritual greatness, and he had also gone through his teachings in Sri Ramana Gita. However, he had not been sure of what his reaction would be on seeing Bhagavan. He decided to go to him with an open mind and judge for himself what he was. The moment he sighted Bhagavan in the stone mantapam across the road from Sri Ramanasramam, he was overpowered by a sense of genuine veneration.

The Power of the Presence

He fell at his feet in adoration, saying, 'There is nothing of the Venkataraman whom I knew very well in what I see in front of me!'

Bhagavan replied with a smile: 'That person disappeared for ever a long time ago.'

My father then explained that he had not visited Bhagavan before because he felt that he had not generated enough dispassion and non-attachment to approach such a great sage.

Bhagavan replied, 'Is that so? You seem to be obsessed by the delusion that you are going to achieve these things in the distant future. If you recognise your real nature, the Self, to what can it be attached? Dispassion is our real nature.'

Since the ashram buildings were being repaired, Bhagavan was staying in a huge stone mantapam [Pali Mantapam] on the other side of the road from the ashram. Devotees had his darshan there, but at meal times we all moved back over the road and ate our meals under the shade of a huge mango tree that was located on the ashram's land. Water from the ashram well was stored in big pots under this tree because it was the coolest place in the neighbourhood. At meal times we enjoyed the shade of the tree and the grace of Bhagavan which, like a cool breeze, blew off our torments.

Bhagavan advised me to engage myself in non-stop japa, day and night, except during hours of sleep. He also encouraged me to study his teachings. I subsequently studied Sri Ramana Gita in his presence, drinking in the import of every verse in it. In addition, I also had the good fortune of listening to Bhagavan explain the meaning of his hymns to Arunachala. This was done in a very informal way. During his morning and evening walks I would follow him and listen as he expounded in great detail the significance of each inspired verse.

Pali Mantapam, located close to the Ramanasramam gate. The picture was taken around 1930.

Early one morning, when there was no one else near Bhagavan, he suggested that we both might go round Arunachala and return before the others could notice his absence and begin to search for him. He took me by the forest path and suggested that Sankara's Hymn in Praise of Dakshinamurti might be taken up for discussion on the way. We walked quickly and within three hours we had completed our walk. We ended up sitting at Pandava Tirtham, a tank located a little to the east of the ashram. In the early days of Sri Ramanasramam, Bhagavan often used to bathe in this tank.

I shall not pretend that I understood everything that Bhagavan said in explaining the import of the hymn. The spiritual exhilaration of being alone in his company was quite enough for me.

On the morning after Bhagavan's forty-third jayanti, my attention had been particularly gripped by a radiant personality who stood out in the gathering of devotees. He was, as I came to know, Kavyakantha Ganapati Muni. At once I saw that he was not merely a learned man, he was also a poet and a tapasvin. His broad forehead, bright eyes, aquiline nose, charming face and beard, and the melodious ring in his voice – all these proclaimed that he was a rishi to be ranked with the foremost of the vedic seers. I soon had the privilege of meeting him because Bhagavan thought that it would be beneficial for me to study under him.

The Power of the Presence

*Bhagavan and Ganapati
Muni standing outside Skandashram.*

I had learned by heart, even before coming to Bhagavan, the three portions of the famous Taittiriya Upanishad, which nowadays are chanted every morning before Bhagavan's samadhi. When I expressed to Bhagavan my aspiration to learn the import of this Upanishad, he directed me to Ganapati Muni, familiarly known as Nayana, who was then living in the Mango Tree Cave on the eastern slope of Arunachala. This cave had been Bhagavan's summer residence during his early years on the hill. It was a cool spot, located in the shade of a big mango tree, with a clear spring of water a little above it. I went to the cave and waited at its outer precincts. Within a few minutes Ganapati Muni came out. There was the fragrance of tapas in his presence and in the whole atmosphere. After sitting in silence before him for a few minutes, I asked him for the explanation of a passage in the Taittiriya Upanishad that embodies the experience of sage Trisanku. It begins 'Aham vrikshasya rariva' and means, 'I am the force operating behind the Tree of Existence'. Nayana gave such a lucid and illuminating explanation of it, I decided there was no need to ask him any further questions. Every word coming out of his mouth had scriptural clarity and sanctity.

Even though he was a great scholar and tapasvin, he used to direct to Bhagavan all those who went to him, saying, 'To learn from him first hand has a special effect'. And Bhagavan, on his part, used to send those who approached him with questions on traditional worship to Nayana, as he was the accepted authority on the subject. Such was the relationship between the Master and his famous disciple. I had many opportunities to notice the special regard Bhagavan had for this learned poet-disciple who, from his early youth, dedicated his whole life to tapas.

In 1929 Nayana lived for four months in a small tiled room facing the Ganapati Temple of Palakottu. During that period I had the rare privilege of sharing his room and serving him. He was a very simple man with few physical wants, so it was a pleasure to serve him. It involved no physical or mental strain at all. Having a natural inner poise, he was always relaxed, despite his brilliance and quick wit. Everyone felt the warmth of his friendliness and the air of purity and peace about him.

It was no wonder therefore that Bhagavan Ramana, despite his equal vision, had some special regard and love for him. This expressed itself in many ways. During these early years Bhagavan used to go alone, without an attendant, for his short afternoon stroll through Palakottu. At these times he would often drop in on Nayana and spend a few minutes with him. The familiarity with which Bhagavan moved with his intimate devotees was heart-warming. But, ultimately, it was neither what he did nor what he said that mattered. It was his glorious presence, shining all around, that attracted us all to him.

Bhagavan was opposed to any sort of waste or extravagance. 'How do you light the fire in your charcoal stove?' he asked me one day.

I told him that I used a bit of old rag rolled up and dipped into kerosene. Smilingly, he scolded me for wasting kerosene when the fire could easily be lit with some of the dry twigs and leaves lying around, or with bits of waste paper.

On another occasion he saw some small bits of paper, about one inch by six, lying on the floor of Nayana's room and asked him if they were of any use to him. Nayana replied that they were waste pieces. He had been cutting some sheets of paper to a uniform size. These strips were the leftover scraps.

The Power of the Presence

Bhagavan said, 'I can stitch these pieces together and make a little notebook the size of a thumb and use it for writing something in'.

Nayana beamed with pleasure at this economy, but I, to save Bhagavan the trouble, offered to do it myself.

Perceiving my motive, Bhagavan remarked, 'All right, but you are to show me the stitched notebook and the use you make of it'.

When I undertook to do so, Bhagavan dropped the matter since he had confidence in my sincerity. As soon as Bhagavan had left I made a tiny notebook out of the bits of paper and wrote down in it the 108 verses of the Indra Sahasra Nama Stotra and its seven concluding verses that were composed by Ganapati Muni in 1929. This work contains a thousand names of Indra culled from the Rig Veda. Nayana composed this litany of names, adding no other words. 'Indra' refers here, of course, to the Supreme Being, not to the Indra of the Puranas who rises to a godly state by merit and again falls from it.

Bhagavan had appreciated the deep, spiritual significance of these names when they had been read out to him during the composition of the work. The next morning, when I showed Bhagavan the tiny notebook with the Indra Sahasra Nama written in it in small script, he scrutinized, as was his way, not only the contents but the stitching and the general appearance as well.

He then exclaimed with pleasure, 'You have kept your promise and made the best use of the bits of paper'.

Unfortunately, I somehow lost that precious notebook that was handled and perused by Bhagavan. I need not say how glad I shall be if this lost treasure is found.

One evening Nayana asked Bhagavan about the forests which at that time still existed on and around Arunachala, saying that he had been in forests in other parts of India but not here. Bhagavan, full of benevolence, at once offered to take him to see them.

He said with a radiant, almost boyish smile, 'Nayana, there is not an inch of ground on Arunachala that has not been trodden by these feet during the time when I was living on the hill, especially during the Virupaksha period. I have been up all the hills and down all the valleys. I have roamed about in the interior regions where no forest guard would dare to go.'

One cloudy day, a few days later, I went to Bhagavan after lunch as usual. He was sitting alone. As soon as he saw me he asked what Nayana was doing and whether it would suit him to go for a walk in the forest. I replied that Nayana was writing something but would jump with joy and gladly drop it if he heard of Bhagavan's proposal.

'Go and tell him then, and be ready,' Bhagavan said. 'I will slip out of the ashram unobserved, so as to avoid a crowd, and meet you near your room.'

Bhagavan joined us a few minutes later and the three of us<sup>1</sup> wended our way towards the forest, led of course by Bhagavan, the born leader through uncharted regions, physical as well as spiritual. We entered the second forest path, cutting through the cattle-fair ground west of Palakottu. After passing the beautiful little temple of Draupadi, Bhagavan took us on to the third forest path that skirts the slopes of Arunachala at varying heights. We passed through a dense forest where creepers entwined the trees and bushes. There were a few streams, some of them flowing and some dried up. As we proceeded along the winding, rugged path, enjoying the beauty of the scenery and the ever-changing aspects of the changeless Arunachala, the clouds cleared away and let the sunlight in for a few minutes. Knowing that Nayana could not stand the heat of the sun on his head because of a yogic experience he had had a few years before, Bhagavan took us to a spreading tree that stood at the edge of a forest pond.

'See Nayana,' he said, 'this is the tree known as ingudi, which is famous for its cooling shade and medicinal properties. It is described in Sakuntala and other famous Sanskrit works. We call it nilali in Tamil because its shade wards off the effects of the hot sun very quickly.' And five minutes under the shade of the tree proved it to be so.

As soon as the clouds gathered overhead again, giving enough shade for Nayana to proceed, Bhagavan took us deeper into the forest. He found a very pleasant place for us to rest on the bed of a dried-up stream, shaded by a huge rock. We did not speak much. In such circumstances one does not feel like disturbing the eloquent silence of Bhagavan by indiscreet talk or even thought. His silence was his teaching, and none of us wanted to interrupt it.

---

<sup>1</sup> Bhagavan's attendant, Annamalai Swami, also accompanied the group. His account of the trip can be found in Living by the Words of Bhagavan, p. 27.

Viswanatha Swami (left) and Muruganar sitting in Ramanasramam in the 1960s.

Time passed unnoticed in the gripping presence of the Lord of Silence. Eventually Nayana suggested that it was getting rather late for Bhagavan's return to the ashram. Bhagavan remarked that if we waited a little longer, we could take advantage of the afternoon breeze. He added that the breeze would make our return walk very pleasant. A few minutes later the breeze did indeed start. At about the same time we heard the sound of someone moving through the bushes to the south. When I looked to see who it was, I saw Muruganar's head above the bushes and announced his presence to Bhagavan. Bhagavan, who was a marvellous actor, placed his finger along the side of his nose, as was his habit when surprised, and expressed astonishment that Muruganar could have penetrated so deeply into the forest and discovered us. Muruganar had by this time caught sight of us and heard our voices. A few minutes later he joined us and prostrated full-length before Bhagavan, his face flushed with emotion. Bhagavan immediately asked him how he had managed to find us in such an unfrequented spot where even a forest guard would find it hard to do so.

Muruganar explained in a voice choked with emotion that he had been present when Nayana had expressed his wish to see the forests. He had heard Bhagavan offering to take him for a walk and had decided that he too would like to come with Bhagavan into the forest. Since that day, Muruganar, who lived in the Arunachaleswara Temple in town, had been coming daily to the ashram as early as possible in the afternoon since he believed that this was the time when Bhagavan would undertake the walk. On the day of our expedition Bhagavan was absent from the hall when he arrived. He soon ascertained that no one in the ashram had any knowledge of his whereabouts. Wasting no more time, he went straight to Nayana's room in Palakottu and found it locked. He asked the temple watchman where we were and was told that earlier in the afternoon Nayana and I had been seen walking with Bhagavan in the direction of the cattle-fair ground. Some intuition had then made him choose the path he did. Finding us was a remarkable feat, for we were about two miles from the ashram when he found us.

All three of us returned with Bhagavan to the ashram, unaware of anything but Bhagavan's grace, the only reality, which shines through all forms and movements and plays hide-and-seek with us all.

The grace that Bhagavan was constantly emanating had been felt by mature devotees even in the late 1890s when Bhagavan was silent, unheralded, and largely unknown. The visit of Achyutadasa, who was one of the earliest to discern Bhagavan's greatness, clearly illustrates this. Achyutadasa had been known as Abboy Naidu before he renounced the world. He was skilled in playing upon the mridangam [drum], and had composed Tamil kirtanas [devotional songs] of great merit, which are both devotional and advaitic. Having heard about Sri Bhagavan he went to Gurumurtam, the temple in which Sri Bhagavan had briefly lived during the closing years of the last century. He sat in front of Sri Bhagavan, who was immersed in nirvikalpa samadhi, and waited.

Viswanatha Swami sitting with Bhagavan around 1930.

When Sri Bhagavan opened his eyes, he paid his respects to him, massaged his feet and exclaimed with great devotional fervour, 'One may be a great scholar, an author or a composer, and everything else in the world. But it is indeed very rare to come across anyone actually established in the Self like you'.

He then announced to his own disciples that there was 'something very rare at Tiruvannamalai', meaning Sri Bhagavan.

Bhagavan's power occasionally impressed or subdued even those who were very sceptical about his state. Vilacheri Mani Iyer, who was a senior schoolmate of Bhagavan, is a good example of this. At school he was noted for his physical strength and for his rough dealing with anybody whom he disliked. His nickname Pokkiri Mani (Rogue Mani) shows what most people thought of him. He never went to any temple to worship, nor had he ever bowed down before any god or man. A few years after Bhagavan had settled down in Tiruvannamalai, Vilacheri Mani Iyer took his mother to the temple at Tirupati. He only went on that trip because his mother needed someone to accompany her. His mother wanted to alight at Tiruvannamalai, which was on their way, to see Venkataraman [the boyhood name of Ramana Maharshi] whom she had known as a small boy at Tiruchuzhi. But Mani did not agree, saying that it was not worth the trouble, so they went directly to Tirupati.

On their way back to Madurai the mother again pressed her son and he had to yield to her request. But he agreed only on condition that he was allowed to take Venkataraman back home to Madurai.

Bhagavan, taken in the era he lived at Virupaksha Cave.

He said: 'It is not for darshan of this bogus sadhu that I am alighting at Tiruvannamalai, but to drag him by his ear and bring him back to Madurai. I am not a weakling. I shall succeed where his uncle, mother and brother have failed.'

'All right, do as you please,' answered his mother.

They both alighted at Tiruvannamalai and went up the hill to Virupaksha Cave where Bhagavan was then staying. The mother bowed to Bhagavan and sat down quietly. But the son, who remained standing, looked and looked at Bhagavan, and got more and more puzzled as he did so.

There was no trace of the ordinary boy Venkataraman whom he had known. Something quite unexpected had happened. Instead of seeing his old friend, there was an effulgent Divine Being seated in front of him, absolutely still and silent. His heart melted for the first time in his life, tears rolled down his cheeks and his hair stood on end. He fell prostrate before Bhagavan and surrendered himself to him. He became a frequent visitor and a staunch devotee of Bhagavan.

The Power of the Presence

Vilacheri Mani Iyer flanked by his two daughters.

He began to follow Bhagavan's teachings but he soon felt that he was in need of a more tangible method than the vichara – 'Who am I?' – and asked Bhagavan several times for a different technique. Initially, there was no response. But one day, when he went out for a walk on the hill with Bhagavan, he stood before him and said, 'I won't allow you to return unless you give me some suitable upadesa'.

Bhagavan replied, 'What is there to teach, Mani? Instead of saying "Siva, Siva," and keeping quiet, why do you ask for this and that?'

Mani Iyer fell down at Sri Bhagavan's feet with great joy and exclaimed, 'I have received my upadesa and initiation!'

From that moment he took up the japa of 'Siva, Siva' day and night; in the course of time it became one with his prana [life current]. He was totally transformed and his face shone with a divine radiance.

When Mani Iyer felt that his end was near, he stayed with Bhagavan for a few days. Every morning he rolled his body round Bhagavan's hall.<sup>2</sup> When Bhagavan tried to stop him, he said, 'I do not know how else I can express my gratitude for what Bhagavan has done for me!'

He passed away a few days later.

Those who were spiritually highly evolved had no difficulty in recognising Bhagavan's state. One such man was Sri Narayana Guru of Kerala. He was well known both as a social reformer and as a man who had attained a high state through intense tapas.

<sup>2</sup> This is known as anga pradakshina. Some devotees even attempt to roll around Arunachala, with their heads facing the hill.

He once visited Sri Bhagavan at Skandashram. After paying his respects to Sri Bhagavan, he sat silently watching him. He saw many people, both young and old, paying their respects to him and passing on, while Bhagavan himself sat silently with unblinking, wide-open eyes. On this day Bhagavan took no particular notice of anybody. He did not enquire where any of his visitors had come from. There was no overt welcome for anyone, but all the time Bhagavan was beaming joyfully while the audience partook of his grace. At lunchtime Bhagavan invited Sri Narayana Guru to eat with him and the other devotees.

Later that day Sri Narayana Guru took leave of Bhagavan, saying, 'May it be the same way here also'.

He was asking that he might also be blessed with the same Self-realisation that Bhagavan had attained. Sri Bhagavan responded with a gracious smile.

After reaching Kerala, Sri Narayana Guru wrote five verses in Sanskrit, calling them Nirvritti Panchakam [Five Verses on Inner Felicity], and sent them to Bhagavan.

- 1 He alone enjoys the inner felicity of the One Self of all who refrains from enquiries about the name, native-land, caste or clan, calling and age of others.
- 2 He alone enjoys the inner felicity of the One Self of all who does not ask anyone to come, to go, not to go, to enter within, or where one is going.
- 3 He alone enjoys the inner felicity of the One Self of all who does not enquire of anybody where he is going, arriving from, or where and who he is.
- 4 He alone enjoys the inner felicity of the One Self of all who has no notion of differentiation such as I, you, he, that, within or without, existence or nonexistence.
- 5 He alone enjoys the inner felicity of the One Self of all who remains the same with the known and unknown and is free from distinctions such as oneself and others and the assertion even of non-difference.

In later years Sri Narayana Guru used to be greatly pleased

The Power of the Presence

whenever any of his disciples visited Sri Bhagavan. On their return he would listen with delight to all the details of their visit.

At the end of 1948 a tiny growth about the size of a peanut was noticed on Bhagavan's left elbow. It gradually grew in size and became painful to the touch. By February 1949 it had grown into a tumour the size of a small lemon.<sup>3</sup> The doctor in charge of the ashram dispensary removed it surgically, and the wound healed up in about ten days. A month later, when the temple erected over his mother's samadhi was consecrated, he looked fit and well. Only a slight sagging of the skin around the elbow betrayed the recent operation.

Soon after the celebrations, the tumour returned. Eminent surgeons from Madras came and examined it. Suspecting it to be malignant, they removed it surgically on March 27th and subsequently treated the region with radium. An examination of the affected tissues showed that the growth was a sarcoma, a form of cancer.

When a fresh growth was observed, even before the surgical wound had healed up, the doctors suggested amputating the arm above the affected area. They thought that this would save Bhagavan's life.

Bhagavan smiled and remarked, 'There is no need for alarm. The body itself is a disease. Let it have its natural end. Why mutilate it? Simple dressing of the affected part is enough.'

A medical board discussed the situation and decided that an immediate operation was needed to save Bhagavan's life. Bhagavan was persuaded to agree to it. The third operation took place on August 7th, 1949. A week later it was followed by radium treatment which aimed to destroy the affected tissues.

The surgical wound healed and for the next three months Bhagavan's general health seemed to be improving. Hope revived in all hearts. But at the end of November, to the dismay of all, the tumour reappeared higher up on the arm. Bhagavan underwent a fourth operation on December 19th. After its conclusion the doctors all agreed that they could do nothing if the sarcoma appeared again, except administer palliatives.

---

<sup>3</sup> Indian lemons are generally quite small. A 'small' lemon probably indicates something about three-quarters of an inch in diameter.

Homeopathy was then tried for a few weeks, but it could not arrest the progress of the disease. Another tumour appeared adjoining the left armpit and it grew rapidly. Two Ayurvedic physicians of repute tried their treatments, but with no success. The whole of the left upper arm became one horrific swelling.

The constant oozing of blood through the wound made Bhagavan anaemic. As the poison from the sarcoma spread throughout his body, it soon became clear that his end was near.

Bhagavan remained unconcerned throughout this long period of pain and sickness. He had no personal inclination for any kind of treatment. Whenever a course of treatment was decided upon by the ashram management, he abided by it, rather to please the devotees than to get cured of the disease. He often said, 'It is for us to witness all that happens'. His behaviour in the last year of his life was a perfect illustration of this.

Bhagavan, with his arm bandaged, sitting outside the Nirvana Room in 1950.

When his devotees were puzzled in December 1949 as to what further treatment to try, one of them approached Bhagavan and asked what should be done.

Bhagavan smiled and observed, 'Have I ever asked for any treatment? It is you who wanted this and that for me, so it is you who must decide. If I were asked I would always say, as I have been saying from the beginning, that no treatment is necessary. Let things take their own course.'

All the doctors who attended upon him were struck by his superhuman indifference to pain and his absolute unconcern even during and after operations. Bhagavan took everything lightly and retained his sense of humour throughout. His casual remarks often made the doctors and attendants laugh despite their anxiety.

The Power of the Presence

A few hours after the serious operation of August 1949, Bhagavan decided to give darshan to the many devotees who were waiting anxiously outside the ashram dispensary, even though he had been advised not to go outside for many days. He was as serene as ever and even smiled from time to time. At noon the next day, as soon as the doctors had left, he returned to the hall where he always sat, saying that he should not occupy the dispensary and inconvenience the patients who needed to go there for treatment. The doctors and devotees who saw him, even after the fourth operation, marvelled at his tranquil expression and gracious smile. There was no sign of suffering on his face.

The seventy-first birthday of Bhagavan was celebrated in his presence on January 5th, 1950. Bhagavan sat up for hours, morning and evening, in the midst of his devotees. He went through many hymns newly composed by his devotees and heard them sung. The elephant of the Arunachaleswara Temple came and stood before him for a while. After bowing to Bhagavan, it took leave of him by touching his feet with its trunk. A rani [queen] who had come from North India to pay her respects to Bhagavan took a motion picture of the scene. The atmosphere was full of joy, and the festivities ended with the bowing of the devotees to their Master at the end of the vedic chanting.

Prayers and chanting of hymns for Bhagavan's recovery went on for months at the ashram and outside. When Bhagavan was once asked about their efficacy, he remarked with a smile: 'It is certainly desirable to be engaged in good activities. Let them continue.'

When the devotees prayed to Bhagavan to set his health aright by his own potent will, he replied, 'Everything will get all right in due course'. And then he asked them, 'Who is there to will this?'

He could not will or desire anything, having lost the sense of separate individuality in the universal consciousness.

Bhagavan kept to his usual daily routine until it became physically impossible for him to continue it. He took his morning bath an hour before sunrise, sat for darshan at fixed hours, morning and evening, went through the correspondence of the ashram and supervised the printing of the ashram publications, often making suggestions. Everything received attention, despite ill health.

More than a year before his mahanirvana Bhagavan had quoted and rendered into Tamil verse a sloka from Srimad Bhagavatam: 'Let the body, the result of fructifying karma, rest or move about, live or die; the sage who has realised the Self is not aware of it, just as one in a drunken stupor is not aware of his clothing.'<sup>4</sup>

Late in 1949 Bhagavan picked up and expounded on a verse from Yoga Vasistham: 'The jnani who has found himself to be formless pure awareness is unaffected though his body be cleft with a sword. Sugar candy does not lose its sweetness even when it is broken or crushed.'

On one occasion during the last months, Bhagavan asked an anxious attendant, 'When we have finished a meal, do we keep the leaf-plate on which we have eaten it?'

On another occasion he told the same attendant that the jnani rejoices to be relieved of the body by death in the same way that a servant rejoices when he lays down his burden at the place of delivery.

With a look of compassion, Bhagavan, in his last days, consoled a devotee, saying, 'They take this body for Bhagavan and attribute suffering to him. What a pity! They are despondent that Bhagavan is going to leave them and go away. Where can he go and how?'

When one of his attendants entered his room, Bhagavan greeted him with a smile and asked, 'Do you know what moksha [liberation] is?'

The attendant looked at the Master in receptive silence, so Bhagavan continued: 'Getting rid of non-existent misery and attaining bliss, which is the only existence: that is the definition of moksha.'

Even during his last days, when he was unable to come out of his room, Bhagavan continued to give darshan to hundreds of devotees, morning and evening, reclined majestically on his couch <sup>4</sup> Skandha xi, ch. 13, v. 36.

The Power of the Presence

like Bhishma on his bed of arrows. Bhagavan did not agree to the cancellation of darshan even on days when his condition was critical. The darshan went on right up to the last evening.

As the news of the rapid deterioration of Bhagavan's physical condition spread, hundreds of devotees came to Tiruvannamalai to have a final darshan. In the queue that filed past his room there were men and women, rich and poor, literates and illiterates from all parts of India and abroad. All were united in their devotion to this Divine Personification.

On Wednesday evening, two days before the mahanirvana, Bhagavan gave a peculiar look of grace to everyone who passed before him in the queue. It struck some of them that it might be the parting look of Bhagavan, and so it proved to be, for during his last two days Bhagavan had not the physical energy to turn round and look at the devotees. But whether his eyes were open or closed, his mind was always clear and he was able to talk to his attendants whenever it was necessary.

On Thursday morning, when a doctor brought Bhagavan some medicine to relieve congestion in the lungs, Bhagavan told him that it was not necessary and that everything would come right within two days. That night Bhagavan directed his attendants to retire for sleep or meditation and leave him alone.

On Friday morning, Bhagavan said 'thanks' to an attendant who had just then finished massaging his body. The attendant, who did not know English, blinked with surprise. Bhagavan explained to him with a smile the import of the English expression. We all thought that Bhagavan, on the eve of his withdrawal from the physical plane, was probably conveying through him his thanks to all who had served him.

Devotees queueing for darshan outside the Nirvana Room in early 1950.

That evening there was a vast gathering of devotees and all of them had darshan of Bhagavan. Many stayed on at the ashram after darshan because they knew that Bhagavan's condition was critical.

At about sunset Bhagavan asked his attendants to lift him up to a sitting position. They raised him up and put him in a comfortable position with one of them gently supporting his head. One of the doctors began to give him oxygen but Bhagavan made him stop with a wave of his right hand.

There were ten or twelve persons, including doctors and attendants, in the small room. Two of them were fanning Bhagavan while hundreds more waited anxiously outside the door. A group of devotees seated in front of the room began chanting with devotional fervour the hymn of Arunachala composed by Bhagavan that has the chorus 'Arunachala Siva, Arunachala Siva, Arunachala Siva, Arunachala'. Bhagavan's eyes opened a little and flashed for a moment. From their outer edges, tears of ecstasy rolled down his cheeks.

Taken on April 14th, 1950, the last day of Bhagavan's life.

The last breaths followed one another, softly, smoothly. Then with no premonition or shock, the breathing stopped. Bhagavan had receded into his Reality, the Heart of the universe. The extraordinary peace of the hour overwhelmed everyone in his presence. The transcendental glory of Bhagavan, the luminous Self, finally prevailed and was felt by all present. Bhagavan's final silence proclaimed: 'Unveiled, here I am, effulgent in my eternal reality.'

The climax of my own spiritual experiences in the proximity of Bhagavan took place during these last moments. As I stood in that small room everything became shadowy, enveloped by an indivisible pure awareness, the one-and-only, ever-present Reality. There was not the least feeling of separation from Bhagavan or the least vestige of sorrow on his physical death. Instead, there was a positive ecstasy and an elation of spirit which was nothing but the natural state of the Self.

A devotee once asked Bhagavan: 'Who are you Arunachala Ramana? Are you God or a siddha? Bhagavan who was living in Virupaksha Cave at the time, replied in verse: The Supreme Self, the blissful pure consciousness sporting within the heart of all gods and creatures, is Arunachala Ramana.'

To those blessed devotees who have contacted Bhagavan in the Heart, he is the eternal presence, the unchanging reality, the substratum of all appearance. But even we, the many who have not understood and utilised properly this rare opportunity of Bhagavan's advent in our midst, can still be spiritually benefited by him. The potency of his grace is such that it will, in course of time, effect a spiritual transformation in us, annihilate our ego, the source of all evil, and absorb us back into the Life Eternal. Let us open and surrender ourselves to his grace.

Sri Ramana Maharshi's life - a brief outline

- 1879 Born in Tiruchuzhi, a small town in modern-day Tamil Nadu, to Sundaram Iyer and Azhagammal. He was given the name Venkataraman.
- 1891 Moved with his family to Dindigul, a nearby town.
- 1892 His father died. Venkataraman then moved to Madurai with his family.
- 1896 His 'death experience' in his family home culminated in Self-realisation. At the end of August he left home, without telling his family, and moved to Arunachala (Tiruvannamalai), where he spent the rest of his life. He spent the first few weeks of his time there in the Arunachaleswara Temple.
- 1897 Moved to Gurumurtam, a temple about a mile from town, and lived for a year and a half either in the shrine or in a nearby mango orchard.
- 1898 His uncle Nelliappa Iyer and his mother visited him and tried to persuade him to return home, but he refused. Moved to Pavalakundru, a shrine on a rocky mound to the north of the main temple.
- 1899 He began to live on the lower slopes of Arunachala, mostly in Virupaksha Cave, but also occasionally in Guhai Namasivaya Temple, Mango Tree Cave and Sadguruswami Cave.
- 1907 He was given the name 'Bhagavan Sri Ramana Maharshi' by Ganapati Muni.
- 1916 Moved to Skandashram.
- 1922 His mother died in May this year and was buried on the southern side of Arunachala, at the foot of the hill. A few months later Bhagavan left Skandashram and began living near his mother's samadhi. This became the site of Sri Ramanasramam. Bhagavan remained there till he passed away in April 1950.

Sources

Kunju Swami

Enadu Ninaiyugal, (Tamil) by Kunju Swami, pub. Sri Ramanasramam 1980. Translation by Dr Venkatasubramanian.

Kaivalya Navaneetam, by Tandavaraya Swami, tr. by Munagala Venkataramiah, pub. Sri Ramanasramam, 1974.

Moments Remembered, by V. Ganesan, pub. Sri Ramanasramam, 1990.

Personal conversations with Kunju Swami. Some of the stories also contain supplementary material that has been taken from articles that appeared under Kunju Swami's name in The Mountain Path.

Muruganar

Guru Vachaka Kovai, by Muruganar. Translated by T. V. Venkatasubramanian, Robert Butler and David Godman. Published David Godman, 2008.

Guru Vachaka Kovai verse numbers: The number before the colon is the number in the Muruganar chapter of this book. The number after the colon is the Guru Vachaka Kovai verse number that has appeared in all post-1974 editions of the book in both Tamil and English.

1:273, 2:17, 3:274, 4:323, 5:503, 6:325, 7:268, 8:280, 9:326,
10:272, 11:282, 12:321, 13:322, 14:271, 15:270, 16:276,
17:278, 18:1008, 19:1009, 20:283, 21:502, 22:967, 23:1, 24:3, 25:798, 26:288, 27:275, 28:327, 29:515, 30:269, 31:277, 32:281, 33:284, 34:286, 35:324, 36:333, 37:290, 38:287, 39:1013, 40:726, 41:794, 42:248, 43:997, 44:1182, 45:309, 46:152, 47:304, 48:310, 49:311, 50:312, 51:313,

Sources

52:314, 53:315, 54:316, 55:317, 56:305, 57:306, 58:308, 59:318, 60:319, 61:320, 62:799, 63:800, 64:1240, 65:2, 66:1241, 67:1244.

Homage to the Presence of Sri Ramana, Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai, by Muruganar, tr. by Prof. K. Swaminathan, pub. Sri Ramanasramam, 1994.

‘How I came to Bhagavan’, by Muruganar and Meenakshi Ammal, The Mountain Path, 1981, pp. 84-88.

‘Obeisance to the Poet-saint: Muruganar’, by V. Ganesan, The Mountain Path, 1973, pp. 202-3.

Padamalai, by Muruganar. Translated by T. V. Venkatasubramanian, Robert Butler and David Godman, Published by David Godman, 2003.

Ramana’s Muruganar, a compilation of essays published by The Ramana Maharshi Centre for Learning, Bangalore, 1991.

The Shining of my Lord, by Muruganar. Translated by T. V. Venkatasubramanian and David Godman. Published by David Godman, 2017.

Sri Guru Ramana Prasadam, by Muruganar. Translated by Robert Butler. Published by Robert Butler, 2008.

Verse numbers: The number before the colon is the number in the Muruganar chapter of this book. The number after the colon is the number in Robert Butler’s English translation.

1:430, 2:93, 3:106, 4:450, 5:139, 6:178, 7:166, 8:195, 9:189, 10:19, 11:21, 12:29, 13:32, 14:56, 15:42, 16:101, 17:234, 18:147, 19:216, 20:239, 21:26, 22:169, 23:48, 24:65, 25:51, 26:54, 27:57, 28:146, 29:58, 30:60, 31:35, 32:435, 33:41, 34:42, 35:355, 36:72, 37:73, 38:111, 39:148, 40:133, 41:116, 42:39, 43:113, 44:131, 45:158, 46:162, 47:43, 48:168, 49:628, 50:629, 51:630, 52:86, 53:105, 54:92, 55:204, 56:99, 57:121, 58:130, 59:441, 60:24, 61:164.

Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai (Tamil), by Muruganar. Translations by Dr Venkatasubramanian.

T. P. Ramachandra Iyer

Bhagavan Smritulu (Telugu), by Venkatachalam, pub. Aruna Publishing House, Vijayawada, 1999. Translated by Smt G. Hemamalini.

Day by Day with Bhagavan, compiled by Devaraja Mudaliar, pub. Sri Ramanasramam, 1977.

‘Gleanings,’ by T. P. R., The Mountain Path, 1971, pp. 111-2.

‘Loving Devotion,’ by T. P. R., The Mountain Path, 1973, pp. 205-6.

‘The Approach Through Song,’ by T. P. R., The Mountain Path, 1968, pp. 62-6.

Chhaganlal V. Yogi

Sri Ramana Mahima (Gujarati), by Chhaganlal Yogi, pub. Sri Ramana Maharshi Kendra, Ahmedabad, 1986. Translation by Vasant Kothari.

The Call Divine, published from various addresses in Bombay in the 1950s. Many of Chhaganlal Yogi’s stories were serialised in this magazine. The articles that begin on the following pages have all been utilised: Vol. 2, p. 318, p. 464; Vol. 4, p. 297, p. 568; Vol. 5, p. 53, p. 296, p. 509, p. 573; Vol. 6, p. 251, p. 290, p. 454; Vol. 7, p. 49, p. 381.

Lakshmana Swamy

No Mind – I am the Self, by David Godman, pub. Bhanumathy Ramanadham, 1988. This chapter was originally written as a third-person account. I have changed it to a first-person account to make it consistent with the other narratives in the book. Sri Lakshmana Swamy has checked and approved this new version. The account of the day of his Self-realisation is slightly different from the version printed in No Mind – I am the Self since Lakshmana Swamy rewrote one crucial paragraph in this new version.

Yogeeswara Sri Lakshmana, a biography, by Ramana Das, pub. Lakshmana Ashram, 1974.

Swami Ramanagiri

Cold Fire, an unpublished typed manuscript comprising Swami Ramanagiri's writings, collected by one of his devotees.

Dancing with the Void, by Sunyata. Chapter ten, pp. 59-63.

'Guru' by A. Chela, published in The Mountain Path, 1980, p. 229.

<http://sriramanagiriswamigal.com>.

'Swami Ramanagiri' by David Godman, published in The Mountain Path, 1994, pp. 144-8.

'Swami Ramanagiri' by Prof. K. C. Sashi, published in The Mountain Path, 1986, pp. 71-4.

Viswanatha Swami

'An Early Devotee', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1976, pp. 70-1.

'At the Feet of Bhagavan Ramana', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1979, pp. 73-6.

'Awareness Absolute', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1976 ed., pp. 1-3.

'Companionship with Bhagavan', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1966, pp. 22-4.

'In the Proximity of Bhagavan', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1979, pp. 141-3.

The Last Days and Mahanirvana of Bhagavan Sri Ramana Maharshi, by Viswanatha Swami, pub. Sri Ramanasramam, 1991.

'The Mysterious Operation of Grace Divine', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1979, pp. 13-15.

'Two Great Men meet Bhagavan', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1969, pp. 101-2.

'With the two Great Poet Disciples', by Viswanatha Swami, The Mountain Path, 1979, pp. 209-11.

Glossary

abbishekam	An act of ritual worship in which a deity is washed or bathed with various liquids.
Aksharamanamalai	A 108-verse poem addressed to Arunachala, written by Bhagavan in 1913.
ananda	Bliss.
annas	An obsolete unit of Indian currency. In Bhagavan's lifetime the rupee was divided into sixteen annas .
Atman	The Self; held by advaitins to be identical with Brahman .
Atma-swarupa	Self, one's true nature.
atma vichara	Self-enquiry.
bhajans	Devotional songs addressed to a Hindu deity.
bhakta	A devotee.
bhakti	Devotion.
bhiksha	Food offered to sadhus by lay people. It can range from food put in a begging bowl to a feast given to large numbers of people.
brahmachari	A celibate student; a member of the first asrama or stage of life.
brahmacharya	Celibacy; the first Hindu stage of life in which one studies with a religious teacher and remains single.
Brahman	The impersonal absolute reality of Hinduism.
choultry	A guest house for Hindu pilgrims.
darshan	To see or be seen by a Hindu deity or Guru.

Glossary

dharma	Right action; moral duty; divine law; religious tradition.
dhoti	A piece of cloth, worn like a wrap-around skirt by many men in South India.
dhyana	Meditation.
diksha	Initiation.
dosa	A pancake made from rice and dhal flour.
giri	Hill or mountain; giri pradakshina is circumambulating a mountain.
iddlies	Lens-shaped rice cakes; the staple breakfast fare of most South Indians.
japa	The repetition of God's name or of any other combination of sacred words.
jayanti	In this book, the birthday of Bhagavan and the celebrations that are associated with it.
jiva	The individual soul or self.
jnana	True knowledge; realisation of one's true nature.
jnani	One who has a direct awareness of himself as jnana ; an enlightened person.
kamandalu	A small water container, usually made out of a coconut shell.
kaupina	A loincloth.
kumbhabhishekam	A consecration ceremony in which large quantities of water are poured from a pot ( kumbha ) onto an image of a deity.
lingam	A vertical column of stone with a rounded upper end. Installed in the inner shrines of all Siva temples, it is regarded by devotees as a physical manifestation of the deity.
maha	Great or big.

The Power of the Presence

maharani	A queen, the wife of a maharaja.
mahasamadhi	The moment when an enlightened being leaves his body.
mahatmas	Great souls or great beings.
mahavakyas	Four upanishadic sayings that affirm the nature of reality and the identity between the individual self and the absolute underlying reality.
Malayalam	The predominant language of Kerala, the state in south-west India that is adjacent to Tamil Nadu.
manana	Convincing oneself that the teachings given by the Guru are true. This may be done by reasoning or by study.
mantapam	A Hindu architectural structure that generally consists of a stone roof, supporting stone pillars, but no walls.
marga	Path or way.
math	A Hindu centre or institution, often monastic in nature, and frequently set up to commemorate a great saint of the past.
mauna	Silence; a synonym for the thought-free experience of the Self.
maya	Illusion; the power that makes the unreal world appear real.
muni	A sage.
mukti	Spiritual liberation.
naivedya	Consecrated food offered to a deity and subsequently distributed as prasad .
nama japa	Repetition of the name of God.
namaskar(am)	A gesture of obeisance, often a full-length prostration on the floor, but sometimes merely a standing gesture in which one indicates respect by putting the palms together.

Glossary

nididhyasana	Meditation or contemplation in which one experiences directly the truth of the teachings given by the Guru.
Padam	Literally 'foot'; it can mean the feet of the Guru or of God, but in the more general sense it denotes the real state of the Guru or God. In many of his verses Muruganar uses it as a synonym for Bhagavan.
padmasana	The cross-legged full-lotus position.
Paramatman	The Supreme Self.
parayana	The chanting of scriptural or other sacred works.
patasala	Traditional school.
pooris	Fluffy, deep-fried chapatis.
pradakshina	Circumambulation of a sacred object.
pranava	The sound of Om .
prarabdha	Destiny; the script that one has been allotted for this life; karma carried over from previous lives that has to be experienced in the current one.
prasad	Anything offered to a deity or Guru becomes prasad when some or all of it is returned to the donor or distributed publicly. Most commonly it would be food or vibhuti and kumkum .
puja	Ritualistic worship or adoration of a deity.
pujari	A priest who performs puja .
rasam	A highly spiced liquid served at most South Indian meals. Its principal ingredients are pepper and tamarind.
rishis	Seers; spiritual adepts who have seen into the nature of reality.
Rs	An abbreviation of rupee.
rudraksha	Large seeds, resembling a small walnut, held to be

The Power of the Presence

sacred by worshippers of Siva. They are generally worn, strung in necklaces.

Sadasiva	The beingness of Siva, Siva consciousness.
Sadguru	A fully enlightened Guru who is established in sat , the underlying being.
sadhaka	A spiritual seeker.
sadhana	Spiritual practice; a means for getting enlightenment.
sadhus	Full-time spiritual seekers who have renounced worldly responsibilities in order to seek enlightenment.
sakti	Power; the creative power and energy of the Self.
sahaja nirvikalpa samadhi	The state of complete enlightenment in which one can function normally and naturally in the world. Sahaja means natural.
samadhi	A direct but temporary experience of the Self, usually in a trance-like condition with no outer awareness; the tomb of a saint.
sambar	A spicy sauce that accompanies all South Indian meals.
samsara	The continuous cycle of death and rebirth to which the individual soul is subject up till the moment of liberation; the phenomenal world of names and forms, especially as it appears to the unenlightened mind.
sankalpa	Will or intention; the faculty of the mind that chooses or makes decisions.
sannyasa	The fourth asrama or stage of life in which one completely renounces the world and all ones relationships and in which one lives as a mendicant monk.

Glossary

sannyasi(n)	One who has taken sannyasa . See the above entry.
sarvadbikari	'Ruler of all'; the title by which Chinnaswami, the manager of Ramanasramam was known.
sastras	Scriptures.
siddhanta	Philosophy; more specifically the philosophy derived from the Saiva scriptures of Tamil Nadu.
siddhas	Perfected beings; it particularly denotes those who have mastered siddhis , supernatural powers.
siddhis	Supernatural powers.
Sivam	The consciousness of Siva; a synonym for the Self.
sravana	Hearing the truth from a qualified teacher.
Sri	An honorific prefix denoting respect.
stotras	Sacred poetry.
sushumna	A channel in the subtle body through which the kundalini energy moves.
swarupa	Real nature; own nature; real form; own form.
tapas	Arduous spiritual practice, often involving bodily mortification. Its aim is to burn off spiritual impurities.
tapasvin	One who performs tapas .
Telugu	A language spoken by about sixty million people who live mostly in the modern-day state of Andhra Pradesh.
turiya	'The fourth'; the substratum that underlies the three states of waking, dreaming and sleeping.
upadesa	Spiritual teachings, particularly those given to a disciple by a Guru.
vasanas	The tendencies of the mind that make one think and behave in repeated, habitual ways.
Vedanta	The philosophy derived from the Upanishads , the concluding portions of the Vedas. Vedanta means 'end of the Vedas'.

The Power of the Presence

Veda patasala

A school that teaches knowledge of the Vedas to brahmin boys.

Vedas

The highest, oldest and most respected scriptures of Hinduism.

vibhuti

Sacred ash; made from burnt cow dung, it is dispensed at the end of pujas. The officials at Ramanasramam generally enclose a small packet in all their outgoing letters.

vichara

Self-enquiry.

zamindar

Large landowner; a member of the land-owning classes.

Index

A

- Abboy Naidu 329
abhishekam 57-8, 136
Achyutadasa 36, 329
Achyutananda Giri 85
Adhyatma Ramayana 22-3, 117
Adi-annamalai Temple 36
Adi Sankara 26, 28, 100, 261, 318, 323
advaita 291 Adyar 301
aham 173
aham Brahmasmi 307
ahaval 141 Ahmedabad 243
ahimsa 307
akbandakara vritti 88, 117
Akhandananda 51
Akshara Malai 26
Aksharamanamalai 27, 47-8, 50, 82, 116, 121, 128
Alamelu Amma (Bhagavan's sister) 54, 57
Alamelu Amma, Tiruppugazh 82 Almora 290
ananda 306
anava mala 160
anga pradakshina 332 Andhra Pradesh 265
angam 35
Annamalai Chettiar, Raja Sir 81
Annamalai Swami 111, 128, 319, 327
Annamalai Swami (Skandashram attendant) 7, 9, 13 annas 3, 247
antara mauna 262
Apeetakuchamba 27
Appar 117
Appunni 98
aptam 35 aradhana 10
Araiyanimallur 235
Ardhra Darshanam 143
Ariakkudi Ramanuja Iyengar 101
Arunachala 4, 21, 31, 36, 38, 66, 83, 106, 113-14, 118, 142-3, 197, 206, 234, 248, 259, 262, 281, 313-5, 321-2, 324-5, 332, 339
Arunachala Ashtakam 34, 212
Arunachala Mahatmyam 30, 37-8, 143
Arunachala Puranam 30
Arunachala Ramana 340
Arunachala Siva 339
Arunachala's Ramana 287
Arunachala Swami, Brahmachari 54, 124-5
Arunachaleswara, Lord 211, 235, 237
Arunachaleswara Temple 27, 48, 80, 101, 121, 191, 234-6, 329, 336
Arunagiri 311
Arunagirinatha 82, 202, 315
Arunagiri Yogi 37-8

The Power of the Presence

Aruna Press 230-1
ashtanga namaskaram 81 asubha vasanas 174
atiasrami 86
Atman 90, 114, 119 (see also Self)
Atmanishta 271
Atma Purana 100
Atma-swarupa 159-60, 163, 169
atma-vichara 114-15, 295
Aum 290 Aurobindo 246 autograph 258
aviyal 80
 Ayyankulam Street 17
 Azhagammal 7-8, 10, 46, 52-5,
     210, 243-4

B

bairagis 32-4 bala harade 244
 Balakrishna Swami 24
 Bala Sannyasin 260
 Bala Yoga 260, 318
 Banares Hindu University 288-9
 Bangalore 229, 231
 Bangaraiah 265
 banyan tree 42, 261
 Bavaji Math 210
Be As You Are 263 begging 209, 216-17, 243, 245, 319 being-consciousness 147, 154, 158, 161, 164-6, 175-6, 181-2, 186, 188
 Benares 289-90
Bhagavad Gita 77, 207, 269
Bhagavan Smritulu 196, 212
*Bhagavan Sri Ramana, a Pictorial
     Biography* 120
 Bhagavatar Swami 31

bhajans 36, 56
bhakta 117, 204, 227 bhakti 167, 181, 203-5, 306 bhakti marga 204
Bhakti-sudha-tarangini 318
bhavana 256
bhiksha 10, 25-7, 46, 61-2, 67-8, 75-8, 85-6, 102, 135, 190-2,
     288, 292
 Bhishma 338
 Big Street 48 blessing 13, 22, 73, 106
 bliss 124, 147-8, 150, 153-5, 157-8, 161-3, 165, 167, 178, 181, 184, 303, 308, 310 boar 143
bodha 165, 173
 Bombay 224-5, 242, 254 bondage 149-52, 176
 Bose Compound 40
 Brahma 143, 162
brahmacharis 79, 98
brahmacharya 320
Brahma-jnani 176
Brahman 9, 14-5, 36, 120, 157, 271, 301, 316, 320
 Brahmana Swami 17-8, 20, 28, 260 brahmins 29, 84-5, 93, 131, 273 Brunton, Paul, 109 bubonic plague 3, 7, 10-11, 109
 Buddha 16, 125, 233
 Butler, Robert 146, 157

C

Calcutta 37, 46, 267
 Chadwick 29, 193, 195-6, 217
chakra 296
 Chalam 212
 Chela, A. 297-8, 300
 Chengam Road 125

Index

Chhaganlal Yogi 208-9, 221-63
Chidambaram 112, 143, 315
Chidambaram Subramanya Iyer 112 chid-jada knot 160

Chilli Swami 32

Chinna Gurukul 217

Chinna Ramanathan 58

Chinnaswami 7, 8, 53, 55, 57-8, 60-2, 73-4, 110, 130, 194-5, 207-9, 212, 319

chitsakti 123

chit-swarupa 187

choultry 21

Christ 124-5, 299

Chudala, Queen 70-1

chutney 93-5

coffee 131

Cohen, S. S. 40, 42, 197

Coimbatore 44

Cold Fire 305-11

Collected Works 31, 37, 90

Collector 261

conches 51

consciousness 123, 138, 140-2, 146-51, 153-6, 158-61, 163-6,
168, 170, 172-3, 175-6, 180-8, 320 consciousness-the-supreme 185

Cudappa 103

D

daiva gathi 16-7

Dakshinamurti 261-3

Dakshinamurti Stotra 24, 78, 261

Dancing with the Void 290

Dandapani Swami 51, 58-61,
93-4, 121, 124, 128-30

darshan 1-2, 10, 16-18, 20-1, 28, 32, 36, 41-2, 48, 50, 61, 69,
74, 81-3, 88, 92, 94-5, 98, 103,

107-9, 112, 116-7, 126, 128-9,
191-2, 207, 217, 220, 222, 226,
229, 231, 235, 237-9, 249, 261,
273, 276, 279, 281-3, 313,
321-2, 331, 336-9

Day By Day With Bhagavan 21, 27, 201, 205, 213, 216-7, 219

Deepam 158

deer 168

Deeparadhana 57

Deepavali 81

delusion 139, 141, 146, 150-2, 156, 162, 166, 172, 174, 186, 188 desire 147, 149, 151, 153-4, 159, 161, 163, 174, 188

Devaraja Mudaliar 204-5, 216-7

Devi 117

devotion 123-4, 153, 166-9, 173-5, 180, 184, 188, 203

dhanam 35 dharma 301

dhoti 84, 95

dhyana 105-6, 117, 120, 204, 262

diksha 291-2

Dilip Kumar Roy 203-4

disciples 131, 141, 145, 159-60, 162-5, 167-8 170-1, 173, 300

Djursholm 288

dosas 57, 60-1

Draupadi Amman Temple 61,
65-6, 327

Drik Drishya Viveka 100

Dwadasi 66

E

Echammal 26, 45, 59, 67, 69, 76,
85-6

ego 150, 154, 165, 169-75, 178, 181, 183, 185-6, 188, 276, 307 ego-consciousness 164, 168, 173

The Power of the Presence

ego-ghost 183, 188 ego-mind 146-7, 178, 184 eight forms of God 169
ekabhakti 82
 Ekadasi 66
 Ekanatha Rao 110
elandai 3 Elapulli Kuppani Swami 1, 2, 9 elephant 140, 147, 164
enna 123 eyes 123, 167, 168, 175

F

Face to Face with Sri Ramana
Maharshi 287 fear 146, 153
 feet (of God or the Guru) 123, 146-148, 153, 157, 160, 166, 173-5 fountain pen 241-2

G

Gambiram Seshayyar 46, 245-6
 Ganapati Muni, Kavyakantha 52,
 54, 61, 118, 120, 141, 260, 312,
 324-6
 Ganapati, Ra 236
 Ganapati Temple 325, 328-9
 Gandhi, Mahatma 109, 221-2, 233, 238, 246, 312
 Ganesan, V. 124
 Ganesh statue 283
 Ganesh Temple 136, 281
 Ganges 123
Garland for the Feet, A 177-182
Garland of the Guru's Sayings, A
 157-176
 Gautama Ashram 51
ghee 247
giri pradakshina 51, 69, 72, 95, 112
 God 91, 141, 221, 222, 265

Godman, David 157, 183 gods 187
 Golden Jubilee 230-1,
Golden Jubilee Souvenir, The 230, 236-7 Gopal Rao 62, 132
gopuram 218
 Gopura Subramania Temple 191
 Govindananda Giri 85 Govindapalli 275-6
 grace 75, 119, 121, 123, 135, 141, 144, 146-7 150, 152-56,
 159-60, 190, 221, 238, 239
 Gudur 265, 267, 269, 271-6, 280, 286
 Guhai Namasivaya Temple 40
 Gujarati 225, 230
 Guru 12, 28-9, 35-6, 78, 82, 105,
 119-22, 140, 152, 156-61, 221,
 227-8, 238, 263, 270, 274, 278,
 285, 297-8, 300, 307
 Guru-consciousness 156
Guru Gita 175
 Gurumurtam 17-8, 36, 329
 Gurumurtam Swami 260
 Guru, nature of the 158-9
Guru Ramana 101, 152, 197
Guru swarupa 35-6
 Guru, the necessity of 161-2
 Guru, the power of the 159-60
 Guru's feet 149
 Guru's form 158, 161-2
 Guru's gaze or glance 137-8, 140-1, 145, 148, 150-1, 154, 159, 164,
 167-8, 181
 Guru's grace 160-2, 164-7, 151
 Guru's role 162
 Guru's words 152
Guru Vachaka Kovai 157-176

H

Hanuman 117, 290-1

Index

harade 244

Hare Rama 274

hatha yoga 114-5

hell 123

Heart 9, 11, 91, 97, 99, 145, 158-9, 161, 164-6, 169-70, 172, 174,
178-81, 183-6, 188, 271, 275, 294-5, 340 heart-cave 271 heart-centre 320

Himalayas 290, 297, 315

Hindi 230

hornets 38-40

Hymn in Praise of Dakshinamurti
323

Hymn of 108 Names of Bhagavan
318

I

I 146, 155-6, 159, 167, 172-3, 178,
181-4, 188, 293, 295, 307

I-am-the-body idea 75, 141

I and mine 123, 140, 165, 173, 179

'I'-sense 154-5

I', true 155

idam 173

iddlies 131

ignorance 147, 154, 166, 174, 178

'I-I' 91, 162, 165, 178, 185

iluppai tree 57

Indra 91, 168

Indra Sahasra Nama Stotra 326 initiation 31, 332

Irai Pani Nitral 143-146

Isanya Math 20-1, 34, 80

Iswara 164

Iswara Swami 17, 65, 131-2

Iswara-swarupa 163

I-thought 278, 321

J

Jada Swami 43, 102

Jagadisha Sastri 254-7

James, Michael 138

Jamnadal Bajaj 208

Janaka, King 90-1

japa 9, 72, 97, 103, 106, 116, 120, 257, 267-8, 270, 274, 322, 332

jatini 69 jaundice 193

Jayanti 40, 323

Jayarama Iyer 51

jiraga 195

jiragavilvadi lehiyam 194-5

jiva 160, 162, 166-7, 169, 172-3, 177, 185, 289, 301, 302

jiva-bodha 173, 185

jivanmukta 162

jiva yatra 291

jnana 103, 122, 139, 149, 150, 152-5, 159-62, 164-74, 176,
178, 186, 203-4, 306

jnana-Guru 123, 159, 160-1, 164, 171-2, 173, 176

jnana marga 204

jnana-swarupa 167, 181

Jnana Vasistham 25, 90, 100, 104

jnana vichara 152

Jnanasambandhar 117

jnani 16, 53, 104, 118, 160, 183, 211, 337

K

Kabir 233

Kailas 123

kaivalyam 161

Kaivalya Navaneeta 9, 14-5, 25, 105

Kalyana Sundaram Iyer 40-1

kamandalu 7, 8, 43, 255, 308

The Power of the Presence

Kanakamma 135
 Kanda 83
 Kandaswami 44-5
 Kandaswami (dying man) 83-4
kanji 198-9
 Kanjikkode 2
 Kannada 230
 Kannammal 26, 46
 Kannappa 202, 205
 Kannudaiya Vallalar 164
 Kannuswami 108
 Karaikkudi S. N. Sattappa
     Chettiar 21 karma 70, 141, 144, 160, 166, 337 Karttikai 78, 101-2
karuna 291
kashaya 103
 Katpadi 2, 4, 96
kaupina 285
kaustubha gem 91 kaya kalpa 7
 Keeraipatti 198
Keerti Tiruvahaval 138
 Kerala 4, 12, 14, 22-3, 96-7, 105
 Kilur 235
 Kishorelal Mashruwala 225
kirtanas 329
 Kongunadu 44
 Kovilur Math 34, 80-1, 88, 100
 Krishna 28, 117, 233
 Krishna Ganapatigal 86
 Krishnananda Swami 88-9
 Krishnaswami 108, 112, 200-1
 Kubera Lingam 95
 Kumara Swami 260
 Kumara Tapasvi 260
 Kumbakonam 79, 108-9
 Kumbakonam Iyengar Swami 57, 101 kumbhabhishekam 88, 236, 273-4 Kumbha Muni 70-1
kummi 24-5

Kuppandi Swami (see Elapulli Kuppandi Swami)
kundalini 296, 301
 Kunju Swami 1-120, 124-5, 158, 210 kurunda tree 145
kusa grass 56

L

Lakshmana Swamy 264-86
 Lakshmi 45-6
 Lakshmi Amma 75-6, 78
laya 103
laya samadhi 103 leaf plates 67, 138
lehiyam 193-5
Letters from Sri Ramanasramam
     21, 37, 45, 246 levitation 309
 liberation 15, 71, 139, 147, 152-4, 162-3, 166, 168, 176, 178, 337 lingam 54, 115, 136-7, 236, 287 lion 140
Living by the Words of Bhagavan
     46, 129, 327 love 152-3

M

Madhava Swami 77, 105-6
madhukari 319
 Madras 68-9, 116, 129, 189, 201,
     223, 299
 Madurai 82, 128, 190, 234, 258,
     287, 297, 300, 302-3, 320, 331, 334
Maha Yoga 204
 Mahadeva Swami 80-1, 88
Mahanirvana 337
maharani 281
mahasamadhi 102, 297

Index

mahatma 205, 238
malas 160
 Malava 70
 Malayalam 5, 9, 22-5, 92, 97-8, 116
 Mambalapattu 235
manana 15-6, 103
manasika japa 116
mandala puja 57
 Mango Tree Cave 324
 Manikkavachagar 24, 54, 122, 138, 145
manonasa 321 mantapam 4, 65, 83, 250, 322 mantra 31, 174, 256
 Marakatha Mataji 281-2
margas 204
 Mastan Swami 51
math 1, 20, 30, 34, 77, 81, 88-9, 98, 100, 105 Mathrubhuteswara Temple 65, 177
mauna 107, 146-8, 150-4, 156-7, 169-70, 172, 174, 176, 188, 262 Mauna Guru 176
maya 134, 140, 150, 160, 164, 293, 305, 308 McIver, Roda 196 meditation 15, 72, 84, 118, 131, 165, 167, 234, 275, 310
 Meenakshi 128, 129-135
 Meenakshi Amma 57
 Meru, Mount 308
 Milakai Siddhar 32
 Mohammed 124-5
moksha 337
moksha deepam 57
Moments Remembered 86, 287 monkeys 136, 252-3
 Mother's samadhi 51, 54, 56-65, 123, 136 210-1, 242, 273, 317, 334

Mother's Temple 208, 210-2, 218, 273, 283, 334
moulvi 234
 Mouni Swami 209
Mountain Path, The 86, 97, 114, 124, 128, 287, 291-2, 297, 312
mridangam 329
 Mudaliar Patti 26, 46, 115
mukti 295
muni 70-1 music 203
 Muruganar 24, 33, 39-40, 60, 76, 109, 116, 121-88, 277-8, 328-9
 Muslim contractor 251, 253
 Muslim devotee 239-41
 Muthukrishna Bhagavatar 190
 Mylapore 193
 Myrobalan 244-5

N

nadaswaram 56
 Nagalinga Swami 25
 Nagaswami 234
naivedya 57, 107, 115
nama japa 116
namaskaram 81, 133, 246, 299
namaste 282
 Narasimha Bharati Swamigal 88, 318-9
 Narasimhaswami, B. V. 109, 124, 128, 258
 Narayana Guru 85, 332-3
 Narayana Rao 73-4
 Narayana Swami 34
 Natanananda, Sadhu 157
 Nataraja 112
 Natarajan, A. R. 287
 Natesa Swami 81
 Nattukottai Chettiars 88
 Navanna Swami 34-5
 Navaratri 27, 277

The Power of the Presence

Nayana (see Ganapati Muni)
 Nellore 269, 279, 286
neti-neti 293
nididhyasana 15-6, 103
nilali 327
 Niranjanananda Swami 52, 60, 118, 194, 315
nirguna Brahman 301
nirvana 291, 297
 nirvana room 335, 338
nirvikalpa samadhi 296, 301, 329 Nirvritti Panchakam 333 nishtha 188
 Northwick School 116, 128

O

Om 295, 302
 Om, Sadhu 182
Om Shanti 310 orange juice 246-7 oranges 200
Ozhivil Odukkam 164

P

Pachaiamman Temple 3, 19, 40,
 51, 59, 251-3
Padam 177-81
Padamalai 177-182
padmasana 65, 104, 270, 298, 303
 Padma Venkataraman 136
 Palakottu 1, 42, 56-8, 106-7,
 109-13, 115, 135, 138, 200,
 281-2, 284-6, 325-6, 329
 Palani 128
 Palanimalai Swami 103-5
 Palaniswami 17-8, 22-3, 25, 27-8, 30, 32, 35, 46
 palanquin 211
 Palghat 2, 17, 97
 Pali Mantapam 322

Pali Tirtham 55-6, 125
panchakalpam 47
 Pandava Tirtham 64-5, 323
parabhakti 167
 Paramahansa 290
Paramatman 112, 270
para-swarupa 168
paravak 170 parayana 50-1, 106-7, 109, 113
parishechanam 85
Parvati 27
patasala 86
 Pattinathar 16
pattiyam 179
 Pavalakundru 20-2, 74, 319
 peace 131, 146-7, 149-52, 156, 168-9, 188
 Pennar, River 269
 Peraiyur 88-9
 Peraiyur Santhalinga Math 98
Periyapuranam 76-7
 Perumal Swami 11, 13, 27, 32-4, 44, 51, 55, 60
 Perundurai 304
phalasruti 24
 Pokkiri Mani 330
 Pondicherry 203
pooris 73, 97 post box 46
 Post Office 205
Potri Tiruvahaval 141
Power of the Presence, The, part one, 282 pradakshina 21, 37, 39, 51, 67, 69, 72-4, 78, 193, 283
 Prajnananda, Bhikku 109 pramada 186
prana 301, 332
pranava 295, 303, 308
pranava body 19, 21
pranayama 115, 266-8, 270, 293, 303

Index

prarabdha 34, 142, 268 prasad 28, 97, 189, 226, 318
pratibhanda 88
 prayer 217
Precious Words and Stray Verses of the Maharshi 197 printing press 227-32 prostrating 81
 Pudukottai Dakshinamurthy Pillai 101
 Puduppalayam 108
 Puduppalayam Rangaswami Gounder 107-8 puja 10, 57-8, 115, 120, 173, 175, 185, 211, 218 pujari 107 pure consciousness 154-6, 183, 185-6

R

raga 124
 Raghava Iyengar 130
 Raja Iyer 280
 Raja of Benares 292
 Raja Rajeswari 80
Raja Yoga 270, 289
raja yoga 292
rajas 321
 Raju Sastry 53
 Rama 28, 53, 117, 266
 Ramachandra Iyer, T. P. 189-220
 Ramachandran 78, 305
Rama japa 117
 Rama mantra 266
 Rama Tirtha 221
 Ramaiah, Yogi 108-9, 114-5, 158
 Ramakrishna Swami 4, 6-7, 12, 14, 33, 52, 55 60-1, 75-80, 93, 95-6, 105, 128-30, 133, 140, 319
Ramakrishna Vijayam 236

Ramalingam Pillai 7
Ramana Deva Padikam 124
 Ramanagiri, Swami 287-311
Ramana Lahari 313
Ramana Puranam 138, 142
Ramana Sadguru 315
Ramana's Muruganar 135-8
Ramana Stotra Anubhuti 110
 Ramanatha Brahmachari 10-11, 50, 55, 59, 109-12
 Ramanathan 57
 Ramanathapuram 128-30
 Ramaswami Pillai 54-5, 314
 Ramdas 233
 Ramdas, Swami 312
 Rangan 264
 Rangaswami 201, 214-5, 219
 Rangaswami Gounder 248 rani 336
rasam 87, 95, 243
 Ravana 117
ravi raksha 255
 Rayapuram 116, 128
rayar 73
Ribhu Gita 50, 88
rishi 70, 324 Rishikesh 109
rotis 247-8
rudraksha 71, 191
 Rukmini Amma 219

S

Sabapathy Pillai 107-8, 136
Sadasiva 140
Sadasivam 186
sad bhava 35
Sadguru 16, 141-2, 147, 149, 151, 164, 168-9, 173, 188 sadhaka 166, 169, 186, 306 sadhana 70, 73, 75, 105, 117, 167, 179, 181, 204-5, 261, 270, 275, 293, 310, 318

The Power of the Presence

- sadhu* 1, 5, 13, 17, 19, 21, 26, 31-2, 34-5, 68-69, 72, 76-9, 88, 94,
 96, 100, 109, 214, 221, 248-9,
 269, 281, 285, 289, 331
Sadhu's choultry 25, 28
Sadhu's Reminiscences of Ramana
Maharshi, A 29
Sadiappa Chettiar 61, 65
sabaja 103, 291 sabaja nirvikalpa samadhi 100, 102 sabaja nishtha 160 sahasrara 301
Saiva Siddhanta 160
sakti 295
Sakuntala 327
Sama Iyer 27, 50
samadhi 10, 12, 51, 71, 92, 101, 103-4, 234-5, 285, 296, 298, 308 samadhis, six 101
samadhi shrine 102, 287-8, 325
samatva bhava 118
Sama Veda 55, 71
Sambamurti 121
Sambandhar (see Jnanasambandhar)
sambar 87, 95, 107, 243
samsara 141, 166-7, 175, 179
sanchara samadhi 72
sandhya vandanam 29
sankalpa 91
Sankara (see Adi Sankara)
Sankaracharya (see Adi Sankara)
Sankarananda 103
Sankarananda Bharati 318
sannyasa 29, 128, 131, 135, 291, 310 sannyasi 85-6, 116, 131, 221, 292, 299
Sanskrit 24, 30, 89-90, 254, 261, 271-2, 288, 312, 315, 319, 327
Santhalinga Math 88
Saranagati Ramaswami Iyer 53, 131 sarcoma 335
Sardar Rudra Raj Pande 236
sarvadbhikari 110, 194, 225
Sashi, K. C. Prof. 291-3 sastra samadhi 99 sat 141
sat-achara 186
sat-bodham 158
Satchitananda 301
Satchitananda Yogeeswara 103
Sathyananda Swami 273
Satram Narayana Iyer 57
Sattappa Swamigal 20
Satyananda Swami 277
savikalpa samadhi 296
seer and seen 90
Self 15, 89-92, 118, 147, 150, 152, 155, 161-2, 164, 260, 271, 278,
 333, 340
Self-abidance 161, 170
Self-Enquiry 35
self-enquiry 9, 71, 103, 107, 113,
 115-7, 120, 202, 271, 275-7,
 292-3, 295, 303
Self-experience 146, 151, 153,
 160, 188, 273, 279, 292, 330,
 333
Self-knowledge 79, 90, 104, 114, 119, 145, 156, 163, 168, 179,
 188, 263
Self-realisation 14, 70, 150, 307,
 308, 321, 333
Self-Realization 124, 223, 258-9 sense objects 166, 174 service 141, 171, 180, 183-5
Seshadri Swami 102
Seven Springs 40-2,
Shantammal 130-2
shanti 168
Shining of my Lord, The 138, 182-88

Index

- siddha* 32-4, 37-8, 72, 90-1, 125, 340
Siddhanta 89
siddhis 70, 98, 239, 289 Sikhidvaja, King 70
 silence 260-3
 Sirsi 118
 Sirumalai Hills 303-4
 Siva 27, 30, 117, 122, 125, 139, 141, 143, 150, 153, 175, 187, 190, 307, 311
Siva-bodha 173
Siva lingam 287
Sivam 147, 152-3, 160, 164, 174, 184, 186
Siva Mahimna Stotra 77
 Sivananda, Swami 109
 Sivaprakasam Pillai 17, 44, 316
Siva Puranam 76-7
 Siva yoga 184
Sivoham 307
Skanda Purana 30, 175
 Skandashram 1, 3, 6-8, 11, 16, 21, 27, 43-55, 57-63, 79, 85, 109, 116, 133, 199, 210, 212-20, 243-4, 257, 313, 333 snuff 254 sofa 247-8, 277
 Sowbhagyattamma 48, 78 squirrels 239, 309
sravana 15, 16, 103
Sri Guru Ramana Prasadam 146-57
Srimad Bhagavatam 337
Sri Maharshi 223
 Sringeri 318
 Sringeri Math 28, 88, 318-9
 Srinivasa Rao, Mouni 109
Sri Ramana Anubhuti 137, 146
Sri Ramana Charita Ahaval 316
Sri Ramana Darsanam 182
Sri Ramana Gita 316, 322
Sri Ramana Jnana Bodham 182
Sri Ramana Maharshi 271
Sri Ramana Sannidhi Murai 123-4, 134, 137-46
Sri Sringadri-Mathadhis
     Bhavitab 318
Steadfastness in Service 143-6 sthitaprajna 35 stillness 146, 155, 164-5
stotras 117
 Subbaramayya, G. V. 216-7, 271
subha vasanas 174
 Subramania Iyer 116
 Subramania Iyer, C. K. 121
 Subramania, Lord 311
 Subramaniam 83, 315
 Subramaniam, Lord 82
 Subramaniya Temple 132
 Subramanya Iyer 315
 Sundarambal 68-9, 72
 Sundaram Iyer 101
 Sundaramurti 117
 Sundarar (see Sundaramurti)
 Sundaresha Iyer 53
Sunday Times, The 223
sunya 291
 Sunyata 289-90, 301
 surrender 141, 143, 152, 173, 177, 179, 204, 238, 340
surya swarupa 256
suryosmi 256
sushumna 97
 Swaminathan, Prof. K. 134, 182 swan 143
 Swargashram 87, 109
swarupa 162, 170-1, 178, 181, 184-7, 321
Swarupa Tiruvahaval 142
 Sweden, 288-89

T

- Taittiriya Upanishad* 324
Talks with Sri Ramana Maharshi 259

The Power of the Presence

- Talyarkan, Mrs 40, 42
 tamarind 251
tamas 321
 Tambiran Swami 115
tambulam 101
 Tamil 1, 5, 23-4, 27, 30-1, 36-7, 52, 54, 56, 78, 83, 90, 98-100,
     110, 117, 121-3, 128, 130, 134,
     146, 157, 163-4, 177, 182, 197, 230, 259, 312
tanmaya nishta 170
tapas 18, 20, 28, 78-9, 122, 129, 142, 168, 184, 192, 316, 324-5, 332 tapasvin 28, 324
tapatreya 174 teak tree leaf 38
 Telugu 24, 230, 274
Testament to Sri Ramana's Presence
     138 Theosophical Society 300-1
 Thomson 40-2
 Thunjath Ramanujan
     Ezhutacchan 22 tiger 168, 227, 254
 Tindivanam 234
 Tiruchuzhi 57, 112, 312, 331
Tiruchuzhinathanai kandene 110, 112 Tirukhalar 89
 Tirukhalar Math 88
 Tirukkazhu Kunram 128
Tirukkural 168
 Tirukoilur 3, 190
 Tirumalai Nayakkar Mahal 128
Tirumantiram 56, 102, 211
 Tirumular 102, 211
 Tirupati 95-6, 331
Tiruppugazh 82, 202, 315
Tiruvachakam 54, 76, 122, 138, 315
 Tiruvallur 68
Tiruvandappabudi 123, 138
 Tiruvanmiyur 297
 Tiruvannamalai 2-4, 12-13, 17,
     34, 72, 81-2, 97, 103, 105, 109,
     112, 121-2, 125, 128, 130, 135,
     190-1, 223, 234-7, 243, 272-3,
     276, 286, 291, 318-9, 330
 Tree of existence 324
triputis 162
 Trisanku 324
 Tulasi 192
tumbai 48
turiya 164, 291
 Turiyananda 7
- U
- Uccha japa* 116
ul 99
Ulladu Narpadu 23, 99, 114, 121
Ulladu Narpadu Anubandham 90, 104, 318
ullam 99 umbrella 211-2
upadesa 6, 9, 116-7, 157, 159, 253, 260, 332
Upadesa Saram 23-5, 225, 280
Upadesa Undiyar 24, 79, 114, 121
upadhi 170
upamsu japa 116
Upanishads 92
upasana 186
uppuma 199
 Uttarkasi 318
- V
- Vaasudeva 59
 Vadipatti 287
 Vadavanur 17
 Vadavur 145
 Vaidyanatha Sastry 53

Index

Valli 45
 Vallimalai Murugan 314
vasanas 90, 141, 174
Vasishtam 16
 Vasu 96-7
 Vasudeva 59
 Vasudeva Sastry 19, 21, 59
 Vedanta 9, 30, 34, 88-9, 100, 316
Vedanta Chudamani 16, 25, 35, 88
Veda parayana 225
Veda Patasala 19, 85-6, 112
Vedas 141, 160, 175, 274
 Veerappa Chettiar, Rao Bahadur
 101-2 Veerasubbia Swamigal 98-101 vegetarianism 86
venba 99
 Venkata 39, 124
 Venkatarama Iyer 212-4
 Venkataramaiah, Munagala 40, 42,
 108-9, 319
 Venkataraman 234, 236, 259-60,
 321-2, 331
 Venkataramana Dispensary 193, 195
 Venkataratnam 279, 280
 Venkatasubramania Iyer, K. R. 46
 Venkatasubramanian, T. V. 157, 183 Venu Ammal 7
vibhuti 53, 56, 81, 222, 226, 249, 251, 253
 Vibhuti Swami 249-51, 253
vichara 105-6, 204, 293, 332
vidvan 128
 Vijayadasami 277, 279
vikshepa 103
 Vilacheri Mani Iyer 330, 332
 Villupuram 234
vilva 195
 Vinayaka 107
 Vinayaka Temple 57, 107

Vindhya Hills 33
 Vinoba Bhawe 237, 239
viraktha gathi 16
 Virupaksha Cave 6, 17, 19, 21-2,
 25, 27-8, 31, 33-4, 36, 42-3, 45, 79, 100, 111-12, 220, 243,
 254, 260-1, 331, 340
 Vishnu 28, 143 vision 97, 124, 228, 232-7, 268
 Viswanatha Swami 109, 132,
 312-40
Vivekachudamani 100, 289
viveka gathi 16
 Vivekananda, Swami 221, 270
 V. R. College 213, 269

W

Waves of the Nectar of Devotion 318
 Westin, Peer 288-90
Who am I? 17, 227
Who am I? 238, 274-6, 278, 295, 332 worship 136, 162, 171-4, 179, 183-8

Y

Yama 162 yoga 203
 Yoganatha 57
Yoga Vasishtam 23, 70, 90, 337
Yogeeswara Sri Lakshmana, a Biography 269, 276
yojanas 25, 30
yugas 139

Z

zamindar 40, 42

What was it like to live with and be guided by Sri Ramana Maharshi, one of the greatest sages that India has ever produced? In Part Two of this three-volume series, compiled and edited by David Godman, seven more devotees share their momentous and transforming experiences.

9 780971 137103

₹ 350
$20.00